Orioles -1.5

Analysis:

The Rockies are rolling into Baltimore to kick off what could be another historically bad season, and I'm taking full advantage. We're grabbing value by backing the Orioles on the run line at home. Even though Baltimore isn't exactly lighting it up this year, they're still about 20 games better than Colorado, which says plenty. The Rockies are throwing out Jesús Senzatela, who's been getting shelled all season with a 4-13 record and a brutal 6.41 ERA. He hasn't been able to keep anyone off the board, and that's a major problem against an Orioles lineup that can do damage. Bottom line: this is a mismatch. Baltimore should handle business and cover the run line without much trouble. Riding with the public on this one as 77% of the bets are on the O's to handle business.

Rays to win

Analysis:

Zack Littell spent his first six years in the big leagues bouncing between roles, but things really clicked for him in 2024 when he finally got a shot as a full-time starter. He made the most of it, racking up eight wins and posting a solid 3.63 ERA over 29 starts and more than 156 innings for the Rays. It was clear he could handle the workload and deliver consistent results. Fast forward to 2025, and Littell hasn't missed a beat. At 29, he's already matched last year's win total with seven and holds a steady 3.53 ERA and a sharp 1.09 WHIP. Even more impressive: he's struck out 83 and walked just 17, showing off the kind of command every team wants in a starter. Looking ahead, he's set to face the Reds, a team he has absolutely shut down in the past with a 0.90 ERA and a 0.70 WHIP over four appearances. Littell will have another strong outing tonight and help the Rays beat up on the Reds tonight. The public agrees with 88% of the bets and 89% of the money on the Rays to win this matchup.
