

A Fond Farewell

Barbies and Princesses Split

Kylie Jenner stood in the center of the Badass Barbies' private gym, arms crossed as she took in the sight before her. This wasn't just a team—this was her creation, a handpicked army of elite, sexy MMA fighters who had spent years training, fighting, and dominating together. She had poured her heart, money, and strategy into perfecting this stable, molding it into the fiercest squad in the UCC.

For a while, she had believed she'd reached the pinnacle—no more changes, no more shake ups. The Barbies were unstoppable. But then, Dove Cameron, her most trusted lieutenant, had dropped a bombshell. Dove wasn't just leaving—she was forming her own stable, The Disney Princesses. With Kylie's blessing, she had taken 13 of the Barbies' best fighters, splitting the team in half and leaving Kylie with gaping holes to fill.

Now, as the reality of the split settled in, Kylie felt a mix of emotions. Pride, frustration, excitement. This was the end of an era—but it was also the beginning of something new.

Kylie Throws a Bash

To show her appreciation for all their hard work, Kylie Jenner went all out, securing one of the hottest nightclubs in Los Angeles for an unforgettable farewell party. The Sunset at EDITION was the perfect venue—exclusive, glamorous, and worthy of the Badass Barbies. She spared no expense, hiring world-class mixologists to craft signature cocktails and enlisting Wolfgang Puck to curate a lavish feast.

As a special touch, Kylie's baby daddy, Travis Scott, took the stage, delivering a private performance that had the entire club buzzing.

But this night wasn't just about saying goodbye. It was a tribute to the journey they had shared, a celebration of both the reigning Badass Barbies and the soon-to-be Disney Princesses. Each fighter was allowed to invite close friends from the UCC, making the event even more special. As the night unfolded, drinks flowed, laughter echoed, and memories were relived. They toasted to their past victories and the battles that lay ahead, knowing that while their paths were diverging, their legacy would never fade.

Plus One

The grand farewell party wasn't just for the Badass Barbies—it was an invitation to the elite and lucky fighters in the UCC. Kylie encouraged every member to bring along their closest friends, rivals, and even future opponents for a rare night of unity and celebration. What was usually a battleground of fierce competition transformed into an evening of laughter, camaraderie, and mutual respect.

Fighters who had once traded blows inside the cage now clinked glasses, swapping war stories and reliving their greatest battles. It was a chance to step away from the grind, to enjoy the moment before the inevitable return to training and competition. With music thumping, drinks flowing, and friendships being rekindled, the night became more than just a farewell—it was a reminder that, despite the rivalries and team divisions, they were all part of something bigger. This was the UCC, and no matter where they stood, they were bonded by the fight.

Party Crashers

Some insisted it was a blatant case of party crashing, while others whispered about an invitation mix-up. But regardless of the rumors, several UCC fighters unexpectedly found themselves among the invited guests, blending into the festivities as if they had always been meant to be there. Karen Gillan, towering and striking, Paris Hilton, ever the effortless socialite, and Ana de Armas, radiating charm, all seemed to embrace the occasion without hesitation. Whether it was a genuine accident or a convenient coincidence, their presence added an unexpected layer of intrigue to the night—one that no one could quite explain, yet no one dared to disrupt.

Tempers Flare

Inviting the sworn enemies of the Badass Barbies to such a monumental event might have seemed like a disastrous idea, but Kylie believed that, for one night, bitter animosities and deep-seated rivalries could be kept in check—at least on the surface. Tension simmered beneath the luxury and celebration, and despite the festive atmosphere, everyone knew it was only a matter of time before cracks started to show.

Sammi Hanratty and Brec Bassinger, once inseparable best friends turned sworn enemies, stunned everyone by keeping their fury in check. Though their animosity crackled like a live wire, they somehow resisted the urge to explode, despite their long-standing vow to destroy each other on sight. Tension hung heavy between them all night, each glare a silent challenge, each restrained breath a battle of willpower. But for now, the storm remained on the horizon—waiting for the inevitable moment when restraint would shatter, and their war would finally begin.

Joey King and Katherine McNamara avoided outright confrontation, but their lingering glares near the wine bar spoke volumes. A few sharp words were exchanged, and they squared up momentarily, their postures tense, before cooler heads managed to defuse the situation.

Ashley Benson and Madison Beer were less restrained, standing chest to chest, voices raised, making bold proclamations about their upcoming bikini boxing showdown on the beach. Though no blows were exchanged, the fire in their eyes made it clear that their real battle was only just beginning.

Dove Cameron and Laura Marano, two of the most bitter rivals in the UCC, played their game differently. There were no raised voices or physical altercations—just cold, biting reminders of past victories and painful defeats. Each woman kept her composure, but the underlying hostility was undeniable, an unspoken promise that their war was far from over.

Ariana Grande, however, had no interest in subtlety and came dressed in her Glinda outfit from Wicked. She made it clear to everyone within earshot that she had beat out Dove for the role and was ready to dismantle Dove's using her legs to chop the Princess down in Hong Kong. Ariana further bolstered her claim by showing everyone her ability to execute spinning back kicks while in heels and a fluffy dress.

Her taunts and bravado were met mostly with silence—until the party ended. That's when Dove had finally heard enough. One shove led to another, and in a matter of seconds, security had to step in before the night's celebration turned into an all-out brawl. The battle lines had been drawn, and after tonight, it was clear—some grudges would only be settled by chuckin' knucks.

Despite the simmering tensions, the night was an overwhelming success—one filled with laughter, reflection, and the bittersweet sting of impending change. The Badass Barbies and their guests, once fierce rivals and steadfast allies, found themselves caught in a rare moment of unity. Hugs were exchanged with lingering embraces, kisses were pressed to tear-streaked cheeks, and whispered promises of staying in touch floated through the air like fragile echoes of the past.

As the night drew to a close, they parted ways not just as teammates but as sisters forged in battle, carrying with them the weight of shared triumphs, unbreakable bonds, and the promise of an uncertain yet thrilling future. Though the chapter was ending, the story of the Badass Barbies and the Disney Princesses was far from over—it was simply evolving, ready for the next fight, the next rivalry, and the next unforgettable moment.
