How many languages can a person speak?

Sometimes we meet people speaking 5 languages, we hear of others speaking 7 or 8. Linguists have long noted that people who grew up in bi-lingual environment or who have learned a foreign language at a very young age do much better in learning new languages when they grow up. But is there a limit to the number of tongues a man can learn in his lifetime?

One of the record-keepers of multilingualism was undoubtedly Cardinal Giuseppe Mezzofanti (1774-1849) who was the head of the Vatican library. When he was 12, he already spoke nearly 10 languages; when he died at the age of 75, he spoke about 40 fluently. In 1846, he himself claimed the knowledge of 78 languages and dialects.

The interesting fact is that Mezzofanti never left Italy, he managed to learn all languages either by finding native speakers who visited the Vatican or from books. He knew a number of dead languages, including Latin, ancient Greek and Hebrew, Coptic, ancient Armenian, old English, etc: these could not have been acquired through real-life teachers. Some of the uncommon tongues which he spoke included Arabic, Chaldee, Persian, Albanese, Hungarian, Chinese, Bohemian etc.

Here is Lord Byron's recollection of the cardinal: "... a monster of languages, a walking polyglot, and more; -- who ought to have existed at the time of the Tower of Babel, as universal interpreter. "
