

Isabelle Morris
She/They
Identity-first Language

Hi, I'm Isabelle! I'm an Autistic PhD student in the Institute of Child Development. I work primarily with Dr. Phil Zelazo in the Developmental Social Cognitive Neuroscience Lab. I'm interested in studying how autistic people think about the mental lives of others. More importantly, I am starting the RADAR project to help change the way research on autism is conducted. My goal is to bring the perspectives of more autistic people into the research about us, and make sure our voices are heard.

When not working, I can be found befriending every dog I see, running, or coaching rowing.