

Just last week it was announced that we would go into lockdown level 3. The last 2 days of the week it was announced we tried to settle back into online learning, but of course, it wasn't a big success.

This week we have been starting to get better and better. Every day I would only manage to get online for my workshop at the last minute. So all my classmates were all prepared except for me. But I started getting used to it and it didn't become a problem.

I had always got emails from my friends to join a video call so that we could all work together and finish it. It was very easy to communicate with them because we didn't have a noisy household hold, but mostly because when the people in my class didn't understand something I could give them a clear explanation to help. It also went the other way around with them explaining to me.

The problem that went around us learning from home was the attendance of my class. This wasn't usual because at our previous lockdown, all the students in, my class were always present doing their work. It did get better during the week but a lot of people looked like they didn't want to have to repeat another learning from home. I think that the students that were absent, took this opportunity to have another holiday.

When I first heard about us staying home again I was furious. I had so many things that I wanted to do, like play at the netball games or go to rugby training. But I got used to having a day off, I'm pretty sure I am gaining weight now. I really miss the support and cheering I would hear from the parents and teammates when something good happened, like an intercept or a goal.

But hopefully COVID - 19 will soon be cured again so that everything would go back to normal. So that people could go back to working to get paid, or the kids going back to school to focus more and learn alot better than from home.
