

0:01 Let's take a moment and look at the two planners available in ESE. We have the all levels planner and the beginnings planner.

0:20 Today students in their social emotional maturity, their cognitive age and academic abilities, and where they have highest needs.

0:33 I had a 17 year old last year that still needed that morning meeting circle time. So when you click on your morning meeting link, you are taken to a morning meeting circle, the laptop in the screen, takes you to a circle time slide d, or you can do your traditional calendar math, your songs, your

0:55 days of the week, your how are you feeling check-ins. If you need another version of this, please feel free to reach.

1:00 We have Sesame Street Workshop, this is a reset board that is a student favorite across brilliant microschool.

1:12 We have a reset choice board that I created that has many different resources to calm, re-center. This is a mindfulness board that I created as well that has some audio books about mindfulness and re-centering.

1:32 There's a second page in here that also has guided calms and breath work. And then we have our calm music rooms.

1:46 So this section over here is more about that resetting, re-centering, and more self-regulation skills. We have a couple of read-alouds here.

1:56 You can restock this little bookshelf with page two. Copying and pasting. You'll see two eyes here. This means that when you share it in preview mode with your students, they aren't able to see these two pages.

2:13 They're able to click as needed. If you're doing this whole group, which I recommend, you don't need to worry about those pages.

2:20 in each of, 1 You have a national day calendar. We have a little spot library, and the big ideas in class dojo for your socially emotional lessons.

2:33 So this is a great morning meeting. Grease. We can go on back and we look at the phonics room for English and language arts, and you see the basic math skills room for math.

2:46 This board also has the connection to your all level sport. You have your exploreport, your protocol board, and your performance staff.

2:56 Exactly. We need the major difference in the beginnings board is that it offers that scaffolded resource of a phonics room that you would see used usually in a kinder through second grade gen ed classroom.

3:12 We have this available for all of our students. You have all of the letters. Alphabet activities and starfall are digraphs and so on.

3:23 So using these to support your students they're labeled all the way through. We also have the same in our basic math skills room.

3:40 There is a sample math block, how you can start your math period, what your agenda would look like, and you can move through the d with many resources to carry you through your school year.

3:57 So I just wanted to share a peek at these two planners, the beginnings planner, and the all levels planner. The all levels planner is what you've seen in your onboarding process, social emotional board, launch and explore boards, and your performance task and choice board.

4:18 Please take care to note each child's need and know that you can go back and forth with these planners again one more time.

4:28 The beginnings planner also has the explore and protocol boards. From the, all levels planner. Happy planning and enjoy each moment with your unique kiddos.
