

Camerahead 2010-04-21T09:00:38Z Revision as of 09:00, 21 April 2010 (One intermediate revision not shown)

A possible creature or living thing called CAMERAHEAD, which is never shown, described, or referred to except in one letter, written in charcoal or ash on a torn envelope which was picked up or seen by a poster on /x/. The original poster describes his or her experience in encountering the artifacts (a miniDV tape and the letter) and then viewing the tape, which is implied to reveal more of itself on subsequent viewings. ""Camerahead"" is a paranormal entity described in a single post on /x/ and in a subsequent Youtube video. Since its upload on youtube, the video has been found to contain additional random clips of alleged spirits or ghosts observing the viewer. This strange appearance of seemingly random 'ghost' imagery is inconsistent with the original impression that a CAMERAHEAD is a living and mortal demon, forcing us to believe this video was created simply as a creep-tactic on part of the original poster who has not returned since the original posting.

The Original Post

Posted on Saturday, August 08, 2008 by Anonymous:

"/x/ what's a camerahead? I was walking home through a nearby gully and came across a weird stack of rocks and a torn envelope with some writing on it. It appeared to have been written in charcoal or ash. It said, "I KILLED A CAMERAHEAD" on the next line "IT TOOK TREVOR" and the last line "GET HELP IF I DON'T COME BACK" and there was a miniDV nearby. this was all that was on it besides static, though i had to watch it a few times before i found this clip. Who took this video? A camerahead sounds really silly if it's a monster with a camera for a head."

A few hours after the initial post, the original poster managed to deliver the following video uploaded to Youtube, claiming a few minutes of static had to be cut due to Youtube's length restriction.

==In Popular Culture==

Camheads are an unused gang design from the video game, Manhunt.

2010-04-22 23:41:46