Haverford College COVID-19 Experience:

We are living in an historic moment. In the same way that we want to know how Haverfordians navigated past global events, years from now, others will want to know how we navigated the experience of a global pandemic brought on by COVID-19.

In the spirit of documenting this moment, the Haverford College Archives wants to collect and preserve the experiences of Haverford College students, staff, and faculty. While the College's official response to this unprecedented event will be recorded and preserved as a result of our records management policies, there are no such provisions in place to ensure that personal experiences and reactions are included in the permanent archives. All members of the campus community are invited and encouraged to participate.

How to participate:

The method of recording your experiences is up to you! The submission form begins with a series of optional prompts for you to answer. You will also have the opportunity to submit digital files documenting your experiences. Some suggestions include written journals, recorded voice memos, screenshotted social media posts, and photos and/or videos of life as you see it.

Please comply with all stay-at-home orders while self-documenting.

The submission process:

- Please use this Google Form to submit your items. You will be able to sign an agreement allowing the College Archives to preserve your submission, and you will receive important information about the copyright and use of your content.
- Submissions will not be available to the public immediately. After they are processed by College Archives staff, they will be available in our digital repository.
- If you have any questions or concerns, please contact the College Archivist at ejonesmins@haverford.edu.

Support is available:

We know that the pandemic has affected our community emotionally, physically, spiritually, mentally, and financially.
