Russian cuisine

There have always been two types of Russian cuisine - on the one hand, the aristocratic, rich style, and on the other hand – a peasant, simple, everyday style. Russian people loved chicken (turkey emerged at the beginning of the 17th century). Veal was not eaten. Russian kitchens only boiled, steamed or simmered food. Food was never heated in fat (butter).

During the times of the Rus, many different kinds of bread, cakes and pirogs were baked and filled with things which were in the house, farm, garden, field, or forest: chicken, vegetables, peas and beans, fruit, berries or mushrooms. The rivers were full of fish, so Pirogs filled with all types of fish were very common. Chicken pirogs were eaten on public holidays. Meat was eaten boiled and on special occasions at the end of the meal like blessed food. There was no shortage of soup, especially vegetable soup: borsch, stchi – a soup made from marinated cabbage. Other, favourite was the famous Russian kasha. So there is a Russian saying: "Stchi and kasha is all we ever get to eat".

The cuisine of the aristocracy preferred the blinse cakes (pancakes) or towers, which were invented by Russian gourmands and comprised blinses of all manner - of different fillings piled up on top of each other. In the times of Catherine 11 it became fashionable to serve French and Russian meals at receptions, followed by delicious desserts and exotic fruits. The evening meal at the tsarist court comprised 80 courses for each person. There were hot broths, marinated chicken, rabbit, tortoise, sausages, pirogues, salads, oysters, bitter oranges, pastry, blinses, sweets.

It is of upmost importance for the Russian hospitality to set a rich table. Blinses are still very popular both by themselves or filled with meat, fish, caviar, and sour cream. Originally, they symbolized the sun.

These traditions still exist. They have survived – at family dinners, friendly parties at the kitchen, even in the kitchens of the communal apartments food, where every housewife, and sometimes houseman cooked his or her own special dish. To this very day, the greatest praise which can be said to a cook is that it "tastes as if it were homemade".

And foreigners can't believe their eyes: "What? You can do all that at home?"
