Garage Door Repair Replacing a Broken Opener

Garage doors are one of the largest moving objects around the house. As such, it should always be maintained to ensure that it won't cause accidents and injuries. When maintaining your door, take your openers into consideration as well, because a poorly installed opener could prompt uncontrollable force from the actual door. For both items to work smoothly, they should both be installed correctly.

This is a fact that you should always consider: the opener is not always the first piece of equipment to malfunction. If you have no idea on how to proceed, call someone who can help you with garage door repair to figure out what is wrong. If you are lucky, the damage could be caused by a minor, less-expensive part.

Garage Door Repair or Replacement?

Replacing a garage door opener is considered as one of the last steps in repair. Before you decide to proceed with this drastic step, consider checking other minor parts that could be the cause of the malfunction. For example, check the spring repair, the hinges and the rollers first. After you've checked everything minor, only then should you consider replacing the opener.

Openers that were manufactured before the turn of the century have noticeable safety defects. In fact, those manufactured before the year 1993 do not pass safety standards imposed today. If you have an older opener, simply replacing it with a newer model would help to ensure the safety of your family. The cost of the item varies depending on the style and brand you want, but they are easily available in home supply stores.

The Art of Choosing

When choosing an opener, you must take into account several factors, like power, quiet operation, safety and security. Make sure that the one you choose has enough power to handle the weight of your garage door. It is also important to choose an opener that has a quiet operation. Who would want a noisy opener anyway? It would be extremely inconvenient, especially if there is a bedroom positioned beside or above the garage.

Choose the best kind of mechanism. Belt drives are usually the quiet types. Direct drives are relatively new and have the smallest amount of moving parts; therefore, they boast the smallest risk of damage. Screw drives are typically noisier and need more maintenance than belt drives and direct drives. Chain drives are usually louder than all the others, but they are also cheaper.

Installing a new unit could take about two to four hours. If you feel unsure about how you are going to install it, you can always just call servicemen who can help you with the installation. If at any point of your installation you feel unsure about how to proceed, it is best to just go ahead and check with the professionals.

Garage door repair services are very convenient and accessible these days. You can easily check the phonebook or rely on your search engine. In a matter of seconds, the information that you need is made readily available for you.
