- Bài mẫu:

It is a fact that English is in an outstanding position in the world as it is used globally nowadays. This has caused people to think about whether it is beneficial to have an exclusive language worldwide. Having one language would bring certain benefits but there will also be some drawbacks.

On the one hand, it is clear that to communicate in one global language would create several advantages. One evident strength is that it would reduce the language barrier by strengthening greater understanding between countries. In other words, the flow of information is no longer deterred, thereby promoting learning and mediating conflicts. Another reason is that it would help to develop a healthier world economy by enhancing trade facilitation. Last but not least, cultural and religious discrimination can be reduced to some extent if all people in the world communicate in the same language.

On the other hand, there are some obvious disadvantages that would arise. First, globalization in language terms will undermine cultural diversity. It means that the special features regarding ways of life and world views of each culture would all be lost if there were only one language. Second, having one global language will definitely turn this world into a monotonous place without any uniqueness of different areas. Consequently, people would not be interested in discovering the world. Finally, this will also be a disadvantageous point for individuals with high linguistic intelligence since there are no other languages for them to challenge their brain.

In conclusion, there are plus points to speak one language globally, including better understanding, trade facilitation, and decreasing discrimination. However, the downside would emerge consequently in terms of the loss of cultural diversity, the lack of motivation to explore the world, and a minus point for language intelligence
