

SL: So you missed another trade setup %Firstname%?

%Firstname%,

Imagine going through the boring process of preparing to enter a trade...

Analyzing different pairs, doing chart markups, and pinpointing exactly where you want to enter,

Just to get completely ignored by price action and not get tapped into a trade.

Annoying right? 😞

I know, it happens to the best of us.

But here's why missed trade setups are beneficial to your trading.

You see %Firstname%,

Most traders want quick results.

They think they can just place a trade and immediately make money.

Although it's possible to do so, this trading approach can be detrimental to your results.

Constantly wanting to be involved in the markets will develop a need inside of you...

To always profit WHENEVER you are in front of the charts.

And %Firstname%, we all know that making money in trading doesn't work this way.

However,

A missed trade setup can actually be considered a hidden win.

Because even though you missed out on potential profits,

It is 100% GUARANTEED that you will not lose money.

Not only does this save you from potentially taking a loss,

It also preserves your capital for the long term.

This allows you to approach trading with a safety net due to the fact you're not actively losing capital,

And you'll have lots of room for future compounding since you can properly increase your position size.

To conclude my point,

Missed trade setups not only protect your account,

They also benefit you in the long term causing you to trade with extra capital to make more money.

So remember this the next time you feel aggravated, fearing you're missing out on profits.

You've got this %Firstname%,
