Personality: A prideful warrior. O’Ryan desires strength, constantly testing herself. She refuses to rely on others, determined to be able to go it alone. She won’t hesitate to abandon another’s plan in favor of her own, and adamantly refuses to back down should she find herself in over her head. Doesn’t talk, but capable of speech.

Weapon: A cannon based on Metroid Prime’s design of the arm cannon [3], designated SRA-388, which is able to act as a semiautomatic weapon with a ridiculous amount of ammunition, but also capable of infusing the projectiles with dust, giving them various elemental properties, though this drastically decreases the rate of fire. When this happens, it takes on the various configurations of the different beams from Prime [4][5][6]. It also is capable of becoming a whip, which can be used as a grappling device or a weapon. When it is in this form, it takes on the missile launcher configuration from Metroid Prime 2: Echoes [7], but with a whip protruding from the barrel.

Armor Design: O’Ryan’s armor is based on the fusion suit after absorbing the SA-X [8], but with no helmet, as well as both the flat shoulder pads from the power suit and the red portion of the power suit’s chest plate [9]. The armor has two full arms, but lacks the arm spike of the fusion suit.

Semblance: Scan. O’Ryan can see different wavelengths of light, specifically ultraviolet, infrared, and x-ray, as well as perceive Aura, though she can only have one active at a time. Her eyes look significantly different as a result [10]. Her pupil appears to dilates and her iris takes the appearance of concentric circles that rotate when she adjusts her semblance before returning to normal.

Behind the Scenes: Saffron O’Ryan is based on the main character of the Metroid franchise, Bounty Hunter Samus Aran. The name of her weapon came from the name of a planet in the Metroid series. Her last name is meant to sound similar to the name of the character in greek mythology, the hunter Orion.
