www.petfoodpatrol.com

Most grocery stores have entire aisles devoted solely to pet food, and with so many options, it is difficult to choose what type of food is best for your dog. All brands claim to have the health nutrients that your dog needs, but how do you know you can trust these claims? Here are some things you might want to consider when choosing the best dog food for Boxer dogs.

The First Two Ingredients

Companies are required to list the ingredients in their kibble or wet dog food in order of prevalence by weight. The first two or three ingredients in your dog food should therefore be named meat sources. For example, you want to see that "chicken" or "beef" is listed as their first ingredient, and not just "meat" or some kind of byproduct.

Other Main Ingredients

Dogs need a diet that is ninety percent meat and vegetables and about ten percent carbohydrates. The list of ingredients on your dog's food should therefore include plenty of fruits and vegetables after the two main meat sources listed. Some grains are almost unavoidable in your dog food, but try to find a food that has rice and barley rather than corn and wheat. Good protein sources such as whole egg are also good to see in the list.

Preservatives

When choosing the best dog food for Boxer dogs, make sure to pay attention to what chemicals are being used to preserve the food. Natural preservatives such as rosemary extract are best. Preservatives such as BHT, ethoxyquin, BHA and propylene glycol are carcinogenic and should be avoided if at all possible. Try to avoid artificial colors and flavors as well.

Allergies in Your Dog

Boxer dogs are known to be susceptible to food allergies, so when choosing the food for your Boxer, you want to try to steer clear from ingredients that your dog is most likely to be allergic to, such as corn and wheat products.

Although dogs can develop allergies to almost anything, corn and wheat are difficult for dogs to digest and so are the most common culprits when it comes to canine allergies. Try to buy foods that have as little corn and wheat as possible, especially if you have noticed signs of a food allergy in your dog such as itching, gastrointestinal problems, ear inflammation, chronic gas, or diarrhea.

Boxers are very strong and energetic dogs, so it is especially important that this breed gets the nutrients it needs to maintain its active lifestyle. Unhealthy dog food that is full of fillers and preservatives will likely be a lot cheaper than the more balanced foods, but it is worth the extra money.
