

Discussion with Grok about "Comment Section"

Ms. Diary

I want to write an explanation about my comment section of my Blogger blog. My last comment was from 2 years ago and I feel my readers think I am unapproachable. Things I want to say: You need to log on to a Google account to comment but I will not be informed of user's ID or email address. You should make an alias so I know what to call you when I reply. I made it necessary to sign in to Google because I used tons of spam and I have once inadvertently deleted a valid comment by mistake. Can you make me a message in Japanese? Feel free to cut out unnecessary stuff.

Grok:

ブログのコメント欄についてご説明します。コメントにはGoogleアカウントでのログインが必要です。ただし、皆様のIDやメールアドレスは私に通知されません。コメント時にニックネームやエイリアスを記載していただければ、返信時にその名前でお呼びします。

以前、スパムコメントが多く、誤って有効なコメントを削除してしまったことがあります。そのため、Googleアカウントでのログインを必須にしました。気軽にコメントしていただければ嬉しいです！

Thanks. Where do you suggest I post this? In a blog post or on a Page?

Posting your explanation as a Page on your Blogger blog is likely the better choice. Here's why:

- Page: A Page is static and easily accessible from your blog's navigation menu or sidebar (depending on your template). It's ideal for evergreen content like commenting guidelines, which you want readers to find easily at any time. This ensures new and returning visitors can quickly see your explanation without scrolling through blog posts.
- Blog Post: A blog post is better for time-sensitive or topical content. While you could post the explanation as a blog post to draw immediate attention, it risks getting buried as you publish new posts, making it harder for readers to find later.

Recommendation: Create a dedicated Page titled something like "Commenting Guidelines" or "About Comments" and link it prominently in your blog's menu or sidebar. If you want to ensure your regular readers see it, you could also mention the new Page in a short blog post to draw attention to it initially.
