

Dear YouTube Team,

I am writing to formally appeal the termination of my YouTube channel and to request a review of this decision. My name is David Micah-Daniels. I previously operated a channel focused on sharing content related to my startup, Bracqet, which is a social media platform designed to connect users in meaningful ways. I understand and fully support YouTube's policies, which exist to maintain a safe and positive environment for all users. However, I believe the removal of my channels was a misunderstanding, and I would like to provide context and clarification.

The primary reason stated for the termination of my original channel was a violation of the Circumvention policy, citing "spamming content." I would like to respectfully clarify that the content I posted on my original channel was not spam. All videos were created to inform, educate, and promote legitimate aspects of Bracqet. My intent was to provide valuable content about the features, benefits, and updates of the platform, and to engage an audience interested in emerging technology and social platforms. None of my videos contained misleading links, repetitive mass-posting, or any activity that would qualify as spam under YouTube's Community Guidelines. Each video was unique and purposeful.

After my original channel was terminated, I created a new channel with a completely different focus: posting educational tech content and sharing authentic tech tips. This new channel was not related to Bracqet or any promotion of my startup, and all videos were designed solely to educate and provide value to viewers. Despite this, my new channel was also removed, and I was informed that creating additional channels would be considered a violation. I want to clarify that this second channel did not violate any policies, nor was it intended to circumvent previous restrictions.

I believe the removal of my second channel may have been the result of an automated system mistakenly associating it with the previous account. I am fully committed to following YouTube's policies and creating content that is safe, educational, and valuable for the community. I respectfully request that my new channel be reinstated, as it does not contain spam or any content that violates YouTube's guidelines. I am willing to comply with any recommendations or limitations YouTube may require, such as moderation practices or posting adjustments, to ensure full compliance.

YouTube is an essential platform for creators like me to share knowledge, educate audiences, and build communities around meaningful topics. The termination of my channels has significantly limited my ability to provide educational tech content to viewers. I respectfully ask for reconsideration of this decision and an opportunity to continue contributing positively to the YouTube community.

Thank you very much for reviewing my appeal. I hope you will reconsider and reinstate my channel so I can continue producing safe, educational, and authentic content.
