

Enlightenment Unit C.E.R. Test

DIRECTIONS: Use evidence from the resource provided to answer the question. You must cite your evidence and provide clear reasoning as to how it supports your claim (answer). Check your work thoroughly for errors before you finish. Use the box under the evidence to take notes before you write your answer.

QUESTION: Were the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable?

DOCUMENT A

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, --That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.

Excerpt from the Declaration of Independence, 1776

C.E.R. GRADING RUBRIC

0 (F) 😞	1 (D) 😞	2 (C) 😞	3 (B) 😊	4 (A) 😊
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Writes a claim that does not let the reader know what the topic is. Does not use evidence or evidence is unclear, confusing, and not cited. Does not provide reasoning that explains the evidence, makes no logical sense, repeats/copies information or does not support the claim. Has more than 12 spelling, punctuation or grammar errors. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Writes a claim that states the answer to the prompt, but is unclear. Uses a piece of evidence in a way that may contain errors, but does not cite it. Provides some proof of thought in the reasoning, but it does not both explain the evidence and clearly support the claim. Has no more than 12 spelling, punctuation or grammar errors. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Correctly writes a claim that clearly states the answer to the prompt. Correctly identifies and cites evidence using quotations with text. Provides specific and unrepeat reasoning that correctly explains the evidence and supports the claim. Has no more than 9 spelling, punctuation or grammar errors. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Correctly writes a claim that clearly states the answer to the prompt. Correctly identifies and cites evidence using quotations with text. Provides specific and unrepeat reasoning that logically explains the evidence, supports the claim, and adds supporting details. Has no more than 6 spelling, punctuation or grammar errors. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Correctly writes a claim that clearly states the answer to the prompt. Correctly identifies and cites two pieces of evidence using quotations with text. Provides specific, unrepeat, and detailed reasoning that logically and clearly explains the evidence, supports the claim, and adds supporting details. Has no more than 3 spelling, punctuation or grammar errors.

ID #	Answer	Score
PERIOD 1
9050	NO ATTEMPT MADE	0
5895	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states that, "among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.-- That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed". This piece of evidence informs me that in order to keep our rights, we must give our Government power. The text also states that, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government," This evidence tells me that when a Government has fallen or become bad, we have the right to find or create a new and stronger Government. These pieces of evidence supports why the ideas behind the Declaration Of Independence were reasonable is because we and the Government both give something in return in order to be a stronger country.	4
3584	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The document says,"we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed" The evidence shows im right because I read it three times and I barly git it.	0
8238	No, The Ideas behind the Declaration of Independcncce was reasonable. The text says "it is the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The Evidence explains that the Government needs to be change so both man and the Government can both have power and be happy, and this supports my Claim because today now an days everyone has rights thanks to the Declaration of Independcncce and also if people takes somebody rights like stealing then their rights will be taken away. this why I think the Declaration of Independcncce is very reasonable.	2
9075	Yes, ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says "Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed". The evidence explains how the government was unferra and supports my answer because how the Declaration of Independence was very reasonable for its time.	0
9188	Yes, I think the Enlightenment thinkers were behind the ideas of the Declaration of Independence.According to the text," The Enlightenment thinkers belived that our rights were god-given and no one can take then away and it comes with life,liberty, and property."The evidence explains that the Declaration of Independence is people having right because our rights were god-given and no one is allowed to take them away and its the governments job to protect the rights of people and supports my claim because the Enlightenment thinkers were behind the idea of the Delcaration of Independence and it also means you have life,liberty,and property.	1
6898	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. In the document it says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and pursuit of Happiness", the document also says, "--That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and institute a new Government." These evidence explains that men are created equal, and that we have rights that cannot be taken which are, Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness, and that if a government become crazy people should and	4 can stop it and make a new one and supports my claim because if these were unreasonable then we wouldn't be able to stop governments that have been abusing their power and we wouldn't have these rights that can't be taken therefore, these ideas were reasonable.

0098	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. The text says "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness. the answer is right because of what it says	0 _____
9000	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. According to the text, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of People to alter or to abolish it." This evidence explains that when any type of government starts to be destructive we have our rights to replace the government and supports my claim because before the Declaration of Independence was signed there was always constant wars which then led them to sign those documents and stop those wars and replace those governments that were destructive. The document says, "Laying its foundation on such principles and organizing powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to affect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explains that the people would choose their leaders for them to keep them safe but they wouldn't so that affected their safety and their joy and supports my claim because how are these governments not protecting anything from their citizens they are even losing their trust they have with the government by not feeling safe any more, and I know that our government has to protect our natural rights and this is where the Declaration of Independence came in and helped them with all their stuff.	3 _____
5965	NO ATTEMPT MADE	0 _____
7415	No, I do not think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. The document says, "that all men are created equal," it also says, "unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The evidence explains that we the people have fair rights and supports my claim because the Declaration of Independence is asking for completely reasonable things.	1 _____
1965	No, the declaration of independence was not unreasonable in the document it says we hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal that they are endowed by the creator the declaration of independence says that whenever any form of government becomes destructive the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute a new government.	0 _____
9063	No, the Declaration of Independence was reasonable. According to the text, "All men are created equal, endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness" It also says that "It is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government." I think this evidence explains that everyone is equal with their rights, and that they have the right to change the government if it is bad, this also supports my claim because it is reasonable to give the people life and rights, for them to keep the government.	1 _____
0987	The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence weren't unreasonable. The document states, "...that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to secure these rights..." The document also states that, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it..." The first piece of evidence explains how the Declaration of Independence allowed and protected the people's natural rights and the other evidence explains that if the Government goes bad or is treating the people unfairly then they can be replaced. This supports my claim because if the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable then the government wouldn't have protected the people's rights or let them choose a	3 _____ new government if it went bad.

9651	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "...That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and institute new Government..." The evidence explains that if the government does anything to break those rights the people have a right to fight back and get a new government and supports my claim because, people deserve the right to fight back when their rights are being distructed upon.	2 _____
6427	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of independence weren't unreasonable. The text states that "It is the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." This evidence explains that if the Government is being disrespectful they can organize a new Government and make the people happy and feel comfrotable and supports my answer because if people feel respected they will want to stay.	2 _____
1024	No, I don't think the ideas of the Declaration of Independence are unreasonable. The text states, "deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, --That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it," and "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." The evidence explains that without the Declaration of Independence, we would end up having a corrupt government system.	1 _____
6643	Evidence "The right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to intitute new goverment laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power.	0 _____
1499	Yes the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence is unreasonable. In the text,"we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal tha they are endowed by their Creator". This evidence explanse that men are created equal and they have all their rights .	0 _____
1687	Yes the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence is reasonable. The text says that all men are created equal and that their endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights. The evidence explains. That these are life Liberty and the persuit of Happiness that secure these rights and this supports my claim because whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Rights of the people to alter or to abolish it.	0 _____
9187	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are edowed by their creator with ceartain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. The evidence explains that every man is created equal and they each have the same rights as others and supports my answer because government has power so the government should treat everybodys rights the same.	2 _____
9390	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable. The text say, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institue new Government". This supports my evidence because if Declaration of Independence was unreasonable then why would they get to replace the Government with a new one.	1 _____
3520	Yes, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says, "That all men are created equal, that thay are endwoed by their Creator with certian unalienable Rights". The evidence explains that they should have made better reasonable ideas.	0 _____

9169	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." The evidence explains that every man is the same and supports my answer because the person who made them gave each of them rights.	1
0352	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." It then mentions, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government". This evidence explains that all people are born with certain rights that cannot be taken away, those rights being Life, Liberty, and Property. It then mentions that if any form of Government were to go corrupt, they can kick them out and elect new Government by putting a vote between the people. This evidence supports my claim because if all people were not born with equal rights, most people will break out in conflict complaining why someone has these rights and why they do not, breaking down society as a whole. If also Government goes corrupt, it would be very unreasonable to not be able to kick them out because they would ruin the country ruining the lives of most people, but with a country-wide vote, they can find someone perfect for the role bringing the country back to peace, making the Declaration of Independence very reasonable.	4
5705	No, the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable," The document shows," that man are created equal and that their certain unalienable Rights that among these are life, liberty among men effect their safety and there happiness in there lifes. so this is why the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable.	0
0292	No, the ideas behind the declaration of independence was not unreasonable. in the text," as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness," this reason say that it was reasonable because who does not want happiness and safety and if wasn't safe I won't happine so that why the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable.	0
5112	Yes the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were reasonable. The text states "... that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness" the evidence explains that every person was born with natural rights and supports my claim because if people were born with Natural rights and the government protected them it would be reasonable.	2
PERIOD 2
9672	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. In the text it states "We hold these truths to be self evident that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, That among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness". This explains my evidence because the Declaration of Independence are the rights they should have .	1
0255	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "That among this these are life liberty and pursuit of happiness. That to secure this right". this evidence explains that back then people were trying to come up with reasonable reasons to make the goverment better.	1
6959	Yes, I think the Declaration of Independence is unreasonable because according to the text, life, liberty and the pursuit of happpines.--That to secure these rights, based on this evidence. I disagree because I think our government is trying to take some of our rights away.	0

1005	Yes, the ideas behind the declaration of independence were unreasonable because in the text it say's that they would certian unalienable Rights, that among these are life instituted among men. in the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it. as to shall seem most likeley to effect their Safety and Happiness.	0
1887	No, the ideas of the Declaration of independenu were unreasonable.due to having a meaningful purpose.Acoriding to the text it stats,"that all men are created equal, that thay are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights that among these are life libertyand the pursuit of Happiness. Bast on this evidence it explains how evcryone had epual oppor tunites due to the Declaration of independence.	0
9076	No, i think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable. The texts say "It is the right of the people to alter or to abolsh it and to institute new government". the evidence explains that the government had become destrutive of these ends.	0
7618	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence are reasonable. In the text it says "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal"...Based on this evdience it shows that whatever race,color, or shape you are you will get the same treatment as anyone else, and this supports my answer because the Government by law has to treat them equally.	2
1658	yes,i think the declaration of independence was unreasonable. the text says,"...That they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable Right". The Evidence explains,that they are endowed by their creator and support my answer because people have unalienable Right	0
9354	I think that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was reasonable. The text says " that all men are created equal". Based on this evidence it says that everyone is equal and they all have the same worth the same.	0
8377	No, I don't think that the Declartion of Independance was unreasonable. Without the Declaration Of Independance the text it states " That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the people to allter or to abolish it." This evidence explains why the Declaration Of Independance is reasonable because it gives people rights and freedom without it there would be a bad government and people would crumble and they can't do anything about it.	1
6936	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. The texts says, " that all men are equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with the unalienable Rights, that umong these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. The evidence explaines that you might think that they were unreasonable but they wernt and supports my answer because in the text it says all men are equal.	0
9649	No, I thnk that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were reasonable, in the texts it states " that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these life. liberty and the pursuit of Happiness, with that piece of evidence it sound like everybody can be equal the same, and this supports my claim because you get rights that you can never lose and liberty and happiness.	0
7446	Yes I think the ideas behind the declaration of independence were unreasonable beacouse In the document It states that 'the foundation the government was laying out could affect their saftey and happiness' the evidence explains the new foundation the gorenment and how it affected people.	0
1927	No i think the Declaration of Independence was't unreasonable. The text says"Government becomes destructiv of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it,and to institute new govnerment".According to the text the Declaration of	0

	Independence was fair.
0879	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. Document A states, "That all men are created equal..." The evidence explains that every civilian has the same rights and supports my answer because someone can't just wake up some day and kill ten people.	2 _____
9094	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. The text says, "Who hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."And supports my claim because they tell the truths and keep it and they try to make it equal for everyone.	1 _____
4827	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. In the document it says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the persuit of Happiness." This part of the document explains that they believe all humans were created equal and should all be treated equally, because we have natural rights that are given to us from the moment that we were born and as you can see this supports my claim because I believe everyone should be treated equally and this idea is good because we are all human and have the right of life.	3 _____
9188	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The document says "its power in such form. as to them shall most likely to effect their saftey and happiness." My Evidence shows the Declaration of Indepence was not reasonable, and supports my claim because I would not like for it too affect my Safety and happiness.	1 _____
9928	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says that," That to secure these right, government are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed--That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends." The evidance explains that the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government. this shows that the Declaration of Independence organinzing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.	0 _____
9654	NO ATTEMPT MADE	0 _____
2871	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form." This evidence explains that people needed their rights to be protected and supports my claim because if the ideas were unreasonable then peoples rights wouldn't be protected and people would be angry about that and it would cause many problem with the government.	2 _____
5205	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable. According to the text it says, " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unaileable Rights, that among thses are life Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence supports my claim because it can be telling many lies.	0 _____
7110	No, The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was reasonable. In the document it say,"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." The evidence explains that every man is born with their own rights and supports my claim because it shows that this is a reasonable answer for the Declaration of Independence.	0 _____

8424	NO ATTEMPT MADE	0
1184	I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was reasonable because in the text it says "Rights, that among these are life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness" and this tell us that they want to make things equal to like the government because not all people agree with them like they so split they power into three becasue they wanted it be equla and safe and kept the people happy because they said if a government has all the power it can use that power for bad so they spit they power into three.	0
9622	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it." The evidence explains that the government gets any forms and abolish it and supports my answer because the government doesn't keep to him self, so thats why I think this is unreasonable.	0
9359	Yes, the ideas behind the Declartion of Indepence were reasonable. The text says " whenever any form of Governement becomes destructive of theses ends, it is the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to insittute new Government." The evidence explains that people were trying to destructive the Government and supports my claim because if peolpe were trying to alter the Governement it can lead to insittute the New Governement.	0
1510	No, the ideas of the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence explains that all are given equally fair rights. I think that this supports my claim because all of these these rights keep us safe and happy.	2
PERIOD 3
0931	No the ideas behind the Declaration of independence was not unreasonable in the thext it says." We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Librety and the pursuit of Happiness.	0
6629	No the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence notreasonable. The text says "That whenever any Form of government becomes destuctive of the governed the right of the people to alter or toabolish it , and to insitutenew government laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect thier safety and happiness". This shows how if the government goes the Declaration of Independence rules say that if the government gos bad the people can alter it this show that the Declaration of Independences ideas behind it are reasonable.	0
9071	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says "laying its foundation on such princeples and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explain that they try to make their people feel protected and welcome and supports my answer because I would like a goverment to make me feel safe.	1
1670	No, I think the ideas of the Declaration of independence are not unreasonable. In the document says, "with certain rights that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. That means they could do any of those thing and that fair they were basicliy free.	0
1169	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. According	1 to the document,"....--That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it..." This evidence shows that these people were using Locke's idea that if a Government doesn't comply and doesn't protect their rights, they have the right take down the Government and supports my claim because if the Government didn't protect what was given to me, I would too want to be indepent from it.	_____

1066	No, I think the ideas behind the declaration of Independence was unreasonable. The text states," It is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form." The evidence explains that though they have a lot of power and that they can change the government and they fixing its power in such a way and this supports my answer because even though they are organizing their power the this will effect their Saftey and Happiness.	0 _____
2081	No,the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. It says on the the Declarotion of Idependence if the people didnt like the ruler or rules that they had to follow they can change it or abandon it if it was unreasonable i dont think the people would have a chance to make decisons like that and it also says that the people are allowed to have their natural rights once again if the Declarition of Idenpendence was unreasonable then they would not be allowed to have natural rights so that means they would not have a fair trial and would go to straight to prison or jail depending how bad the crime they commited was.In Conclusion no i think that the declaration of indepence was fair.	0 _____
9351	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document states, "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness". This evidence explains how people are equal and audomaticly born with rights. This evidence supports my claim because it shows how there should be no difference between anyone and how we all should be treated the same. Additionally, the document also states, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." This evidence explains that if the government becomes courrupt, the people can make a new government that works best for them. This evidence supports my claim because it shows how the Declaration of Independence's main focus was what was best for the people.	4 _____
9124	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence werent unreasonable. The text says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it." The evidence explains that when something bad is happening people should help out and supports my answer because it would be nice to help in a bad situation.	1 _____
5395	The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. According to the document it says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal". This evidence shows that the people who created the Declaration of Independance wanted people to be treated fairly and not have one person be treated higher than another just because of wealth and supports my evidence because everyone wants to be treated kindly and that's pretty reasonable to me.	2 _____
5831	No, I don't think the idea behind the Declaration of Independence is unreasonable. The text states" That to secure these rights, Governments are institued among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governerd, That whenever any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the people to alter or to ablolish it," The evidence states, the goverments take care of people's rights and when the government passes away it's only fair that the people praise him for working so hard	2 _____ and trying to maintain the rights that they deserve. It is only the right thing to do when the time for the government is over. They still adore him and think of him as someone great because he worked hard. I wouldn't like it if I worked so hard for people and they only thank me in the moment and forget all about it in the future. This supports my claim because I think any hardworker would be upset to be forgotten after his very stressful responsibility.

4955	The ideas of the Decloration of Independnce were reasonable. The text states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to abolish it, and to institute New Government". The evidence explain that if the government is being unreasonable that we can go against the government, and this supports my claim becasuse if the citizens were not able to correct the government the government were be un fair. and unresonable.	0 _____
4260	The idea behind the Declaration of Independence was reasonable. In Document A it says " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights that amung these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness," In this evidence it is saying that we are born equal with certain rights the Goverment can't take away from you. The text also says " That to secure these rights, Goverments are instituted amung Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,-- That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it," The evidence in this text is explaining that the Government gets their power from the People and if they do anything that does not protect our rights the People will take back the power they gave them and replace them if they do not change and to me that is a clear reason.	2 _____
0904	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says, "New Government laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explains that the governemnt is trying to harm people and cause damage and supports my answer because who would want to feel harmed or scared no one does, they would want to be happy and comfortable.	1 _____
8439	The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were reasonable. The document states,"That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of the ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likly to effect their Safety and Happiness. The evidence explaines that the people shold also have a say in the Declaration of Independence to protect themselves from the Governments bad choices, this supports my claim because with out the Declaration of Indipendence the government would over rule.	2 _____
9761	No, I believe the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence are reasonable. The document states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence shows that everybody is made equal which means everyone has the same rights as anyone else so no one is better than anyone else when it comes to rights. The text also states, "...it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form,..." This evidence means that if enough people with same rights as everyone else could overthrow the government for a less corrupt government will make america better, this supports my claim because since everybody has equal rights which I think is pretty fair so that would make me think that the Declaration of Independence was reasonable.	3 _____
1078	No, The ideas behind the Declaration of independence were not unreasonable. The document says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the people to alter of to abolish it, and to institute new Government". This evidence explains that if the Government fails to protect the peoples	3 _____ rights that the people can change them for a new Government but if they do stick to their agreamnet they stay with their power so the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence weren't unreasonable because both sides get an equal amount of what they want.

5557	Yes, the ideas was behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. The text says,"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Right, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness". This evidence explains that the people wanted to be safe and have liberty on their life and they also wants to be happy.	1 _____
4013	No,These ideas where not unreasonable.The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident,that all men are created equal."This evidence explains these rights should be fair as men are equal to each other, and this support my claim becuae i like to be treated fairly.	1 _____
7348	No, I dont think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. In the text it states "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it..." This just describes how you have the power to change the Governments ways, and i dont see how it doesn't seem reasonable.	1 _____
1386	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of independence was not unreasonable. The text says "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalianable Right, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness" The evidence explains that even if your different you were created by your creator with certain Rights.	1 _____
9021	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text states " That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. This claim support my evidence because they put a lot of thought into the Declaration of Independence.	0 _____
5435	Yes, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. In the document it says "We hold these truths to be self-evident". The evidence explains why the Governments don't tell the truths to us and supports my answer because one way another we will fine the truths no matter what.	0 _____
5762	Yes, People to alter of to abolish it, and to institute new government laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such from, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."The text says",that all men are created equal that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights that among thses are life liberty and the pusuit of happiness that to secure these rights.	0 _____
5826	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable. In Document A it states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government." This evidence says that if the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable then they will have to get new gorverment and this supports my evidence because the Declaration of Independence was reasonable so they don't need to insitute a new government.	1 _____
8510	The ideas behnid the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable. The text says,"Governments are insultituled among men". This evidence shows that the ideas behind the Declaration of independence was unreasonable.	0 _____

0595	No, The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable. The document says," deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it." The text explains that if a government were to go under bad leadershipthe people of that said government would be able to change or overthrow that government.This supports my claim because The Declaration of Independence is the paper that lets people change governments so without the Declaration of Independence if a govenment were to go bad cause they always do then the people would not be able to fight back and they would just have to live under those rules so that is why the Declaration of Independence is not unreasonable.	2
9951	Yes the ideas behind the Declaration of Indepeandence unreasonable. The text says we hold these truths to be self evident that all men are created equal that they are endowed by thier Creator with certain Unalienable Rights. This evidence supports my text because in the paragaraph it explains that to secure these rights Governments are instiuted amoung men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.	0
9526	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government". This evidence explains that if a government does bad things the people can overthrow and replace them and supports my claim because I think that it is reasonable to replace them if they are doing bad things.	2
PERIOD 5
9811	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independcence were not unreasonable. The text says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created eequal..." This evidence shows that all men are created the same and there for if everyone is the same it should be fair because no one is better than another so there for they are reasonable.	1
0205	The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The evidence states "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, Liberty and the pursuit of Hapiness" The evidence explains that people are born with rights, and supports my claim because the government has to protect the rights.	2
1329	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness". This piece of evidence explains that all people have certain rights. Additionally, the document says, "That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,--That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government". This information shows that the government must protect the rights of the people and that the people have a say in the government, meaning they give power to the government. With this information, it shows that the ideas of the Declaration of Independence were reasonable.	2
0438	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document shows, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." This evidence explains the people could remove people who is working for the government, to be replacing with someone else if they do something dumb and this supports my answer because we don't want bad people ruling the states with laws that are unfair like	2 not being able to practice their own religion.

7650	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence are not unreasonable. The text says, "it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government," The evidence explains that the people have the right to choose what they would want and supports my answer because people like to choose what they would want instead of have other choose for them.	2 _____
8963	No, I do not think that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to self-evident, that all men are created equal," the text also states, "that among these are Life, Liberty and pursuit of Happiness.-- That to secure these rights,..." These pieces of evidence explain the rights that are given and the how the government needs to protect those rights. This supports my claim because it is only fair that people get treated the same no matter their past lives or physical appearance, and every one should be allowed to be given opportunities without having to feel afraid that there could be a possibility that it will get taken away because of bias or corruption in the government.	3 _____
0659	No, there were no ideas behind the Declaration of independence that was unreasonable. The document says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Right, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence shows that all these ideas had a reason and supports my claim because it shows that all these ideas had a purpose on what they said.	0 _____
9073	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it". This evidence explains that if the government turned on us we can make a new one and supports my answer because we have the option to replace our government if its bad and that makes people feel happy and safe making it reasonable. The text also says, "that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence explains the we have rights the government can't take or change and supports my answer because these rights can't be taken making the people happy and the Declaration of Independence reasonable.	3 _____
1520	Yes, the ideas behind the declaration of Independence was unreasonable. The text say Governments are instituted among Men, deriving they just power from the consent of the governed, that whenever any from of government become destructive of these ends, it is laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness the evidence explains that the government power is organizing and destructive, and support my claim because the claim say that declaration and Independence was unreasonable.	0 _____
6978	NO ATTEMPT MADE	_____ _____
9898	Yes, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says, " Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends ,it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explains that the government instituted among men and supports my answer because of their just powers the consent of the governed.	0 _____
8183	Yes, I think the idea's behind the Declaration of Independence that was unreasonable was a good idea. The text says, "that in the 1776 Men had a thing that was going on	0 _____ about the Government that he had too much power and government's are in charge of protecting people rights". The evidence shows us that during the Declaration of Independence people said that "people said some stuff but had no reason" or something bad is going to happen.

8937	No, I don't think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence are unreasonable. The text states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." This evidence explains that if the Government does something the people do not like they would find a new government, and this supports my claim because it is good that the Declaration of Independence cares about other people's opinions.	2 _____
7493	Yes, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were reasonable. In the text it states "we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life liberty and pursuit of happiness. This evidence supports my claim because every single person is born the same.	1 _____
6201	I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were reasonable. The evidence shows "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government." This evidence states that if a government becomes corrupt the people could abolish it and vote for a new government. and supports my claim because I think it is fair that we could overthrow the government and have a better government rather than staying with a corrupt one.	3 _____
1101	No, I don't think the ideas were unreasonable. The text says, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." This evidence explains how Government could be replaced due to the Rights of the people and supports my answer because if it loses control, the people will find its way to remove it.	3 _____
0398	No, I don't think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence are unreasonable. The text says we hold truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. This evidence shows that my claim is right because of what it says.	0 _____
5752	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights." The evidence explains that everybody is all treated the same and no one is treated differently. This supports my claim because I agree that all people should be treated the same. It will be unfair to the ones who are getting treated badly.	3 _____
0169	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." The evidence explains that people are treated the same and supports my claim because I would like to live in a place where you can be what you want and do what pleases you. The text also states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explains that people should choose to get rid of someone they know is bad and will effect them and supports my claim because I wouldn't want to live somewhere that has bad people controlling us and I would love to choose if we can get rid of them or let them stay.	4 _____

4132	No,the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence weren't unreasonable.According to the text",That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends,it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it ".This evidence explains that ideas behind the Declaration of Independence wasn't unreasonable and supports my claim because the Declaration of Independence allowed people to have power instead of just having one ruler with absoulte power.	1 _____
9985	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independece are not unreasonable."The text says", that all of the people should have there own ideas even if other dissagre with them and have freedom so they can do what they want.The evidance explains that government should protect people with rights and let them have the power but not that the people gives power to the governments that why people should have their own examples.	1 _____
0648	Yes, I think the ideas behind the declaration of Independece are unreasonable. The text says, "all men are created equal, that they are endowedby the creator with certain unalinable Rights". This evedince explains that all men in the goverment have the same power and no one in the goverment can be more or less and sopports my answers because I think is important to have equal rights.	0 _____
9388	The idea behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. In the text the author explains theat "it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government. This evidence shows that no matter if the government becomes coruped the people of the US can put some one els in charge and this supports my claim because the idea of the Declaration of Independence is that no matter what the people dont loose there rights and if they do they can take them back.	1 _____
9284	Yes, i think the ideas behind Declaration of Independence unresonable. the text says, "that all men are created equal." the evidence explains how men ae created equal and they are endowed by thier Creator whit certain unalienable rights.	0 _____
8989	No, the ideas behind the Declation of independence were not unreasonable. The text say, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructice of the ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it." This evidence explains that its the peoples right to be allowed to alter if the government becomes destructive and supports my clain because if the government were becoming destructive some people would want to be allowed to alter and or abolich it.	1 _____
1100	I thnk that the declaration of independence is resonable. in the document says that every man should be equal to eachother.the evidance explains that people should be equal with eachother even if they dont look that same.	0 _____
7661	No, I do not think that the ideas behind the Declaration of Indepence were unreasonable, The text says "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institue new Government" This evidence helps support my answer because the ideas of the Delcartion of indepence were reasonable and if the people wanted new goverment because things were going bad that was safe for everybody and equal.	0 _____
9771	Yes, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were uneasonable. Becuaes in the text it states " all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienble Rights," That why i think Yes	0 _____
9807	No, I do not think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independece were unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life". The evidence explains to me that all people have rights but can get them taken away if they do not make the right decisions and supports my claim because we should be able to make are own choises without having to make mistakes and re-thinking are	1 _____ decisions.

9790	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence wasn't unreasonable. In the document it states, " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence shows that the Declaration of Independence was reasonable to everyone since no one was different nor more important than someone else, this supports my claim because I think everyone having the same rights as me is reasonable.	2 _____
2169	No , I dont think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. According to the text,"that men are created equal, that they are endowed by thier creator with certain unalinenable righth that among these are life liberty and the happiness."Based on this evidence shows that, men are created equal because every single person is born the same basic and how importance they are so yes i think that why my answer is righth because it is fair.	1 _____
6631	"Yes, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable." "in the text that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, Liberty and the pursuit of happiness,--that to secure there righis Governments are instituted among men." this supper my claim because the Governments is a men deriving their have powere from the consent of the governments whenever any from the Governments becomes a destructive of there ends.	0 _____
PERIOD 6
3212	No, i don't think The ideas behind the declaration of independence were unreasonable. Because the text states "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are edowed by their creator with certin unalienable rights, that among these are life liberty and pursuit of happiness". This evidence expains how they thought what they did was right this suppports my answer because most people would like to feel safe in there commuinty.	0 _____
9553	No, I the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text states, "all men are created equal, that they are endowed ny their Creator with certain unalienable Rights". This evidence explains how everyone is the same and they all have rights and supports my claim because I wouldn't want to have less rights or privlages just because my skin is a different color. The text also states, "whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it". This evidence explains how any time a government becomes or does something bad you have the right to change or destroy it and supports my claim because nobody should have to tolerate a bad goverment and should have the right to change it.	3 _____
8003	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal..." The text also states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it..." These two peices of evidence mean that everyone is made equal and has equal rights, and if the any type of Goverment tries to take them away the people can get the Goverment in trouble. This evidence proves that these rights were fair and important becuase everyone deserves respect and by having the Declaration of Independence it gives everyone the respect that they deserve, so it comes in perfectly with the basics rules of life that everyone should know and follow.	2 _____
5035	No I believe the idea behind the Declaration of Indepndence was reasonable becuse. In the text it says that, the Goverments secure these rights which manes it cant be change. this supports my claim becuse the idea behinnd the Declartion of indepdence was	0 _____ resonable.

5368	No, I don't think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence unreasonable. "The text says" that they hold these truths to be self-evident and that whenever any Form of government becomes destrutive of these ends. Principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness and all the men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, Governments are instituted among men, deriving whenever the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government.	0
8273	No, I dont think that the ideas behind the Decloration of Independence were unreasonable. The article states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." this evidence shows that men were treated fairly and they were born with natural rights like their life, freedom, and happiness, this supports my claim because Men were treated equally and had their Liberty.	0
5456	I believe that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document says, "endowed by their creator with unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed". I think that what the people who wrote this meant was that the government was supposed to protect the natural rights of the people. I think this is a good thing because if someone is stripped of their natural rights then its like they aren't even a person anymore, and it is a good thing because they are being provided protection of their rights by the government. The document also states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute new Government". I believe this a very reasonable thing to demand because it ensures that if there is a ruler who isn't doing a fair job when it comes doing things for the people like protecting their rights or just being a bad president in general, the citizens of the country still have the power to kick them out of office and elect a better and more reliable president, and that is why I think it is a very smart and reasonable thing to do.	4
4661	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document states, "That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--" Also, "That to secure these rights, Governments are insituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed,--That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government." The evidance explains a rule in the Declaration of Independence that if any type of Government were to try and take a persons natrual rights then they will get overthrown and be replaced with a more suitable Government that the people choose and this supports my answer because I dont think it is unreasonable for an avaerage person to want different people in the Government if they were to take away their rights something that natrually belongs to them for no valid reason.	2
0950	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The document states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government" This evidence explains how people have the rights to select a new Government if they become abusive with their power and this supports my claim because people should have the rights to pick a new Government if they use their power to cause destruction.	3
2586	No, the Ideas behind the Declaration of Independence weren't unreasonable. The text says, " We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life	2

	Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. The evidence explains that men are being treated equal and supports my answer because since the men are being treated fairly they can be Happy.
0124	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "That they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." I believe that these rights are reasonable. People should be allowed to do their own things since it is their life. I do not think it would be fair if humans would have to follow rules that do not give them freedom. The text also states, "That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed..." The Government had to protect the people's rights. In return they would receive power. Since the Government had power and the people had their natural rights it would balance both of them out with no issues. So no, these ideas were not unreasonable.	3 _____
8189	yes i do think that the Declaration of Independence was unreasonable because in the text it states to be self evident that all men are created equal that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights that among these are life liberty and pursuit of happiness that to secure these rights government are instituted among men deriving their just powers from consent of the government are that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government.	0 _____
6363	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. Based on the evidence it says that "they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights." This explains that it gives us certain rights that cannot be taken away or given away. This supports my claim because in this time some people are not getting equal rights and we want these equal rights.	1 _____
0497	No, I think that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says that men are created with certain unalienable rights that are life liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The text explains that the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence was to give the people the life liberty that they born within and to pursue the happiness that those rights gives and support my claim because the ideas of the Declaration of Independence is that the government have to protect the people rights and if the government alter or abolish people rights that will make that the institute of new government such principles and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness.	0 _____
9399	Yes, the ideas behind the Declaration of independence unreasonable. The text says, "that Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their powers from the consent of the governed". The evidence explains that whenever any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends and supports my answer because the right of the people to alter or to abolish it and to institute new government.	0 _____
0188	No, I think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." The evidence explains that all people have these rights but with responsibility meanings to them and supports my claim because this would lead more people to enjoyment and would be fair.	1 _____
8370	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence shows that it is not unreasonable because every human being should be born with natural rights because everyone is equal, at which should be protected by the government.	1 _____

6410	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal." Based on this evidence we can see that the ideas were about people being treated fairly. This supports my claim because I would not want to be treated unfairly in a government.	2 _____
0110	No, I don't think the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were unreasonable. The text says "it is the Right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness." The evidence explains that the ideas of the Declaration of Independence were to make three people safe and happy and supports my claim because if the ideas were to protect and make three people happy it is not unreasonable if it is this for our good.	1 _____
0026	No, I think the idea behind the Declaration of Independence was not unreasonable. The text states, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." This evidence explains that all men have unalienable rights and supports my answer because we are all created from the same creator, so that means we are all equal and have rights.	1 _____
9877	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The article states "...Government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form as to they shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness". Based on this evidence the government wanted to be organized and reasonable. This supports my claim because if the government was not reasonable they would not have let people have rights.	0 _____
7109	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were very reasonable. The following text states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and institute new Government, laying its foundation." The evidence explains that whenever a government becomes very abusive with their nation, the people will have reason to change and create a better government. In my opinion, I think the Declaration of Independence was very fair, and support my claim because it's reasonable because isn't letting the government have the full power over the country and giving opinion to their citizens.	1 _____
0482	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence we're not unreasonable. The text says, "That they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. The evidence explains that you might not know what the Declaration of Independence is and supports my answer because it was used to divide the Government power into three branches.	0 _____
5827	No, The ideas behind the Declaration of Independence weren't unreasonable. The text says, "That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." This evidence explains that the people and the government had a "deal" where the government protects the humans rights and the government gets power and this supports my claim because from what I am understanding The Idea of the Declaration of Independence is about what I had mentioned in my reasoning and that can be useful or important for both the people and the government.	1 _____
0353	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The text says, "that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." The text also states, "That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government". The evidence explains that everybody has the same power as one another and also have the same rights that can not be taken away even from government, and also says that if a	3 _____ persons natural rights gets taken away, it could lead to people voting for a new government which supports my answer because I also believe that our rights should not be taken away and nobody wants a government who takes away our rights so we should be able to kick out the government if necessary to have better lives and a better society.

8779	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The evidence that I think sounds right is, " That to secure these rights " Based on the evidence I showed Declaration of Independence aren't unreasonable ideas because if they were so unreasonable the government wouldn't be protecting these ideas or rights for the people.	0 _____
8361	No, the ideas behind the Declaration of Independence were not unreasonable. The evidence says, "as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness". The evidence explains that in the Declaration of Independence it wants to make sure that your happy and most likely wants you to be safe, and supports my answer because i would want my country to make sure that im safe and happy.	2 _____