PROFILE

Non-traditional undergraduate historian graduating May 2026, specializing in twentieth-century U.S. history, women's civic organizations, and public memory. Research focuses on institutional power, racial exclusion, and gendered conservatism, examining how women's civic activism shaped citizenship, civic identity, and national belonging through commemorative and political practice. Employs archival, oral history, and digital public history methods to recover and interpret marginalized historical narratives.

PUBLIC HISTORY AND RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

Oral History Field Researcher

FlagSHIP Oral History Program - Flagler College, Upstate New York, May 2026

Conduct professional oral history interviews documenting immigrant women's experiences, contributing new archival material to a scholarly project on Ottoman Greek immigrant women's negotiation of identity within Greek American communities, and supporting interview design, ethical compliance, archival preparation, and undergraduate field training.

Oral History Project - Flagler College, November 2025

"Inside Lineage Culture: How Overlapping Memberships across Heritage Societies Shape Identity in the DAR"

Designed and conducted an oral history study of contemporary DAR members, integrating interviews with research in DAR national and chapter archives and relevant secondary literature to analyze lineage identity, ritual practice, and organizational culture, resulting in a produced podcast and an article-length scholarly manuscript.

Digital History Project - Julius-Maximilians-Universität Würzburg, Summer 2025

"Monuments and Memory: Reading City Halls"

Co-contributed to a faculty-reviewed, collaborative digital public history project using comparative and spatial analysis to interpret civic architecture in the United States and Germany through an ArcGIS StoryMaps platform.

Historical Methods Research Project - Flagler College, Spring 2025

"Behind the Hall: Internal Debates within the Daughters of the American Revolution following the Marian Anderson Incident"

Conducted an archival case study of the DAR's racial policies and leadership debates using sustained member-based access to national and chapter-level DAR archival collections, including unpublished manuscripts, circular letters, and internal reports. Analyzed how institutional rhetoric, leadership culture, and public pressure shaped responses to racial exclusion, producing a peer-reviewed article and establishing the archival foundation for subsequent oral history, capstone, and independent study research.

Digital Archival Research Assistant

Patriot Records Digitization Project - NSDAR, January 2021 - January 2026

Supported a national digital archive by transcribing, indexing, and verifying Revolutionary War-era documents, applying paleographic skills and genealogical analysis to expand public access to primary sources and ensure accurate lineage documentation.

ONGOING RESEARCH

Senior Capstone - Flagler College, Spring 2026

"Local Chapters, National Myths: The Overlap of Leadership and Memory in the DAR and UDC"

Examines how overlapping leadership networks between the Daughters of the American Revolution and the United Daughters of the Confederacy shaped institutional power, racial ideology, and public memory through continued research in national and chapter-level DAR archival collections and original oral history interviews focused on Southern and borderlands chapters.

Independent Study - Flagler College, Spring 2026

"Patriotism and Public Memory: DAR Commemoration in National and Transnational Contexts"

Analyzes how the Daughters of the American Revolution constructed national and transnational narratives of American identity through commemorative landscapes, drawing on continued research in DAR national and chapter archives alongside field documentation, spatial analysis, and oral history to assess the politics of patriotism, civic identity, and belonging.

TEACHING AND ACADEMIC SUPPORT EXPERIENCE

Embedded Peer Educator - Flagler College, Fall 2025

Course: Palestine and Israel (300-level History)

Provided in-class academic support through tutoring, course attendance, and weekly office hours, collaborating with faculty to support students' analytical writing, historical interpretation, and engagement with complex political and historical material.

History Tutor, Learning Resource Center - Flagler College, Fall 2025

Delivered individualized tutoring in historical writing and research methods across multiple levels of the history curriculum, assisting students with thesis development, primary and secondary source integration, and effective study strategies.
