

My Experience with Kai G. Nikki

Hello, my name is Sterling G. Brickman. I was hoping that I'd never have to compose one of these, let alone toward someone I consider to be a friend, but circumstances demand that this be done. What I will share with you here is not unique to me, as there were other individuals who were roped into this particular scheme of his, his hunt for what could be colloquially referred to as "Penguin Race".

I was but one of several individuals who were baited into joining his relentless hunt for the Mario Party 2 minigame known as Bobsled Run, or "Penguin Race", as his tragic luck meant that the minigame had not once popped up for him. He called upon myself and others under the pretense of wanting company as he tried to round out his minigame collection, but little did I know that we would all be tossed rather unceremoniously into the "Penguin Race" dungeon. That period of time between Kai beginning this endeavor and finally completing his goal would prove to be a harrowing one, each of us effectively wheeled out for the express purpose of becoming "Player 2" for each attempt. Worst of all was being subjected to a unique torture via the combination of spotty Strayan internet and Nintendo's dodgy servers via the Nintendo Switch Online catalog of N64 games, at times creating input lag that threw our gameplay far out of whack. Mercifully, one Hamela Hampter was the one whose luck finally liberated those of us still in that dark pit after about two months of attempts.

That experience was one that I would not dare wish upon even my greatest foes (if I had any), and I hope that Kai will get what he has coming to him (a great day and better luck with minigames showing up for him in the future).
