Making a Statement With Wall Decor

The finishing touch to any room is the wall art you select to accompany your furnishings. Wall decor is so much more than mass-produced framed prints and the cliché mirror over the fireplace mantle, it is a chance to express yourself creatively while adding undeniably vibrant life and color to your home.

The first step in selecting the appropriate wall art to accent your home is to evaluate the space. If you have tall ceilings or a wide blank wall, you're going to want to think big, the bigger the better! There is nothing more dramatic in a room than having an over-sized piece of art as the room's centerpiece. Of course you don't want to overwhelm the room, which is why you want to carefully evaluate the space in question. Taking measurements is always helpful, that way when you go shopping to select your wall decor, you know approximately what size art piece you should select in order to achieve the look you're going for.

Your next evaluation should be color scheme. You want your art to harmonize with your existing decor. Keep in mind that the art doesn't have to exactly match or mirror the color or your decor, only to be complementary to the existing palette. There are a number of ways to coordinate artwork with the room's existing colors using the color wheel principle of monochromatic colors, harmonious color schemes, complementary color schemes and triadic color schemes. You can easily match your existing decor and utilize any of these color matching principles by purchasing a simple color wheel from any art supply store or online retailers like Amazon.com.

The color wheel will help you determine what shade your decor should be to achieve the harmony you need to make your room really pop. When selecting colors, you're looking for something that doesn't clash with existing colors but instead ties everything in to bring out the vibrancy of the room's accents and main pieces.

Now that you've evaluated the space you're going to decorate and have learned enough about colors to make sure everything harmonizes, the final step is evaluating what you want the mood of the room to be.
