Removing a Raccoon From Your Chimney

Maintaining cleanliness is essential when taking care of your home. It is where your family lives. It is the place where you stay the most. It is where your kids play, and it is where you entertain visitors. The living room, bedroom, bathroom, kitchen, and dining area - all parts of the house must always be clean. If you do not have the time to clean your house, make sure that you can ask somebody else to do the work. It is important that every corner of the house is sanitary. If you have pets at home, make sure that all wastes from them are properly disposed of. But what if you have unwanted visitors or pests that try to live in a certain part of your house without your permission?

Raccoons are nocturnal animals, meaning, they are more active at night. They are also one of the brainiest or most intelligent animals in the world. They are these mammals who have spots around their eyes which look like masks and they have stripes on their tails. Some people want them as pets. Raccoons are animals that are not that hard to find. You can even have them living in your chimneys without you knowing. Houses with chimneys usually have problems such as cleaning it regularly and the problem of others could be the raccoons. On the other hand, removing them from your chimneys could be more challenging than other chores. Some raccoons could have roundworms in their bodies which could infect your eyeballs.

Being aggressive in removing them from your chimneys could be a bad idea. Trying to start a fire in your chimney to drive them away from the top part of your chimneys could even make things worse. Raccoons would find a way to avoid the smoke and the strategy they would most likely use is to go down into your chimneys and reach your burning fireplace. When they do so, some of the raccoons who slid down your chimney could escape the fire and they could be scattered all over your house and bring more trouble than what they have been giving to you when they were still living in your chimney. The worst thing that you could do to them is burn the mother raccoons alive together with their baby raccoons. Other people try to use ammonia to drive raccoons away and doing so brings success to the operations when it comes to achieving the purpose which is to remove them from your chimney. The negative side of using ammonia is its effects on the breathing of human beings. Some people might experience difficulty in breathing or even choke when they smell the full strength ammonia that you poured into your chimney.

With all the efforts you could do to try removing raccoons from your chimney, there are only a few effective ways on how you can really attain win-win situations. One of them is setting up a cage where they could be trapped and by using a long stick to drive them away from there. By doing so and by wearing gloves, you can hardly get infected with the ringworms that they possibly have in their bodies. Take them using a long stick and transfer them to a different place away from your home. Mother raccoons usually have their babies living with them and by following the mentioned technique; you would also be able to bring no harm to the mother raccoon and to her babies. Just remove them gently. In case they come back, you can always use raccoon eviction fluids which can be bought from stores.

Removing raccoons from chimneys can really be a challenge. It is not just the fact that you have to remove them from where they are placed that matters. It is also about being humane in evicting them from the area. You could not just remove them without handling them properly. Raccoons can be very inconvenient to have and they could bring you a lot of trouble but that does not mean that we should remove them by force or even kill them. They have lives, as well. That is why, with the proper ways provided earlier on how you can remove them from your chimneys, you would not just have a sanitary home. You would also have the chance to make them live more comfortable lives in places where they really belong.
