RESTAURANTS

All the day people are occupied and busy. Some people go to work and do something, others go sightseeing trying to see as much as possible. But there is a moment when they understand they miss something. It is having a meal. Having a meal is necessary and pleasure combined. When a person is fed up, he can go on with work and sightseeing. Usually we have a meal 3 times a day: breakfast, dinner, supper. In Great Britain there are breakfast, lunch, tea or high tea, dinner and supper.

For breakfast we have soft-boiled or hard-boiled eggs, or omelet, a cup of tea or coffee, buns or rolls. As for the English people they have porridge followed by bacon and eggs, marmalade and toasts, coffee or tea.

For dinner we have a plate of soup, beefsteak or mutton chops, roast beef with fried chips or mashed potatoes, fish, salad, juice.

For supper we have fried meat, fish, salads and a cup of tea or sour milk.

When we are out we can have a meal in restaurants or cafes. Now we can choose any cookery, because there are Chinese, Italian, French, Indian and other nationalities cookery restaurants. Restaurants can be big and small, expensive and not very expensive.

In the restaurant you can see tables with chairs around. On the table there are plates, forks, knives, spoons, menu card and wine glasses. Waiters receive orders and bring dishes. There can be orchestra and a dance floor near it.
