A Petition from the Great and Noble Houses of the Westerlands to His Grace King Damon of House Lannister

Several concerns have befallen the noble gentry of the Westerlands, and these concerns regard the ability of the Regent Wardeness Jeyne of House Estermont to effectively rule and govern our great kingdom. The concerns are listed below in full.

Jeyne is a woman, and it is not a woman's place to rule the Westerlands, as none have ever done so before. Succession dictates that the kingdom pass in its rule and authority from father to eldest son, as it did from your Father, may the Gods rest his soul, to Your Grace, and has for countless centuries.

The Lady Jeyne has the House name of Estermont since donning the cloak of Greenstone on her wedding day. She is no longer a Lannister, and has no claim to Casterly nor any authority over its holdings.

The Lady Jeyne lacks experience with rule. At most she has presided over the small household of Greenstone, and is not qualified or capable of ruling a major house or holding, let alone an entire kingdom, yet alone the wealthiest of them all.

The Lady Jeyne's behavior at the Tournament of the Three Ships was unbefitting of a woman, and resulted in the death of Ser Gunthor Lannister, a knightly hero. Her actions were that of a woman whose feminine emotions were unchecked by gentle breeding or the presence and authority of her husband.

It is for these concerns that your loyal and noble subjects request the immediate removal of Jeyne of House Lannister from her undeserved station, and that a more appropriate and competent Regent Warden of the West be selected to rule the kingdom of the Westerlands in Your Grace's stead.

Signed,

Houses Plumm, Algood, Farman, Serret, Westerling, Lantell, Swyft, Lannister of Lannisport

The Westerlands Conspiracy

Using the Trial at Fair Isle as their justification, several lords in the Westerlands petitioned to have Jeyne Lannister removed as Wardenness, claiming the trial as well as her husband's Stormlander blood as the reason, but really wanting to weaken Lannister influence in the region due to unhappiness with many of Damon's choices/policies.
