

The cooker of dreams

A man by the name Barry was taking a relaxing walk along a cobble street. He was quite a bizarre fellow. On top of his head there sat a hat in a shape of a snail. He wore a bright red vest and a white shirt with colourful polkadots underneath. Barry never enjoyed tight trousers, instead he preferred olive green shorts with golden stitches. Surprisingly, Barry wore a pair of plain old black shoes. He didn't quite like them because rocks always got stuck in them. As he was walking, he came across a cinema. They were showcasing an action movie with lots of explosions and debris, featuring Tom Cruise. Barry wasn't interested in action movies, so he carried on walking towards a house appliance store. He went inside and immediately saw a bright orange cooker! Barry always loved to cook and make delicious meals for others. What he especially loved the most was all of his cooking equipment. He asked an employee how much would the cooker cost. Unfortunately, Barry's new cooker was made out of cardboard and wasn't for sale. This represented a big hindrance for Barry. Luckily, Barry wasn't the type to give up, so he went home and thought of a plan on how to get the cooker. He decided to break in the house appliance store during the night and sneak out with the cooker.

Barry spent all night running through his neighborhood searching for the perfect heist supplies. He found a ladder, some rope, and a rubber chicken he'd bought at the airport gift shop years ago. At midnight, Barry sneaked into the appliance store. He managed to grab the orange cardboard cooker, but in his excitement, he knocked over every single appliance in the store. Microwaves went flying. Toasters catapulted through windows. An industrial-sized blender somehow ended up in a tree outside. The noise was so loud that the entire town woke up and rushed to the scene. They found him standing proudly with the cardboard cooker and the rubber chicken tucked under his arm. The townspeople were so charmed by Barry's commitment to obtaining that cooker that they decided to celebrate him.

The orange cardboard cooker became the town's cultural heritage where it was placed in the town square, encased in a glass monument. Every year, townspeople gather to admire "The Cooker of Dreams" which became a symbol of never giving up, no matter how ridiculous and silly the goal may seem. Barry's outfit became iconic. School children wore polka-dot shirts and olive green shorts with golden stitches as their uniform. And that's how a bizarre man in a snail hat became the town's greatest cultural legend.

Anastasija Srebren, 4C