Notes

If you need information on where to find specific issues in the Titan Books and IDW reprints, this post on TFW2005 and their respective TFWiki articles are your best sources.

I designed this index to give the smoothest read possible, and as such some stories have been removed from normal continuity. Others are out of what you might consider true chronological order, rather being placed from the perspective of their headnotes or framing devices.

The "Out of Continuity" stories can be read as listed, in publishing order, before the regular series, afterwards, or entirely separately, depending on how much of a headache the continuity hiccups give you.

+ Many UK prints of US strips modified art or dialogue in order to fit UK continuity, "Gone But Not Forgotten!" and "The Big Broadcast of 2006" having been the most extensive. Information on these changes, which issues they were made to, as well as scans of most of the altered panels can be found on Stuart Webb's "Transformation" blog. Minor alterations like color-corrections or spelling localizations aren't noted here.

"Target: 2006" begins right after Galvatron says "Decepticons, to Earth!" in both versions of TF:TM.

Woman's Day 12/26/85 - "The Night the Transformers Saved Christmas" was a bonus strip in a non-Transformer magazine that was never reprinted as far as I'm aware, but I found a link to a scan of it on its TFWiki article.

+ US #25 - "Gone But Not Forgotten!" introduced the Predacons to the US continuity, which was a problem for UK continuity since the team was first introduced in "Prey" overseas. UK #107-108 remedied this by editing dialogue to include references to Megatron's amnesia following his encounter with Straxus, as well as removing all reference to "G.I. Joe and The Transformers".

Death's head was originally created by Simon Furman for The Transformers, but first he appeared on a one-page backup strip called "High-Noon Tex" in several other Marvel titles as a bid for character rights. His fate following "The Legacy of Unicron!" was revealed in Doctor Who Magazine #135 - "The Crossroads of time" (reprinted in "The Incomplete Death's Head" #1), after which he crossed over with "Dragon's Claws" and went on to star in his own self-titled series, "Death's Head", as well as a number of other crossovers.

Rather than placing the two "Movie prequels" around Target: 2006, I've left "Ark Duty" right after "Kup's Story," the other Kup/Blurr/Hot Rod-centered flashback, and "Prime's Rib" with the other black & white future stories. Technically this breaks chronology, but for story reasons they fit better with these issues.

+ US #43 - "The Big Broadcast of 2006" was a fairly direct comic book adaptation of The Transformers S3E02, but UK #180-181 added pages that completely changed the context of the story making it into a prologue for "Space Pirates!". Without these pages, US #43 is not canon.

Starting in 1989 Marvel UK began printing multiple transformers strips of equal length in each issue. For simplicity's sake, I've listed the UK-original as the backup strips and US and UK reprints the new strips as the main strips. Even though the UK-original stories were almost always the ones featured on the cover, the reprints were usually put first in the issue.

On that note, 1989 is a mess. There were between four and five different series of events all taking place around the same time, and one set in the future. I did my best to consolidate each into distinct arcs ("Time Wars" epilogues, Carnivac/Survivors issues, etc.), but a good number did end up radically divorced from how they were published.

Although "Aspects of Evil" contains many blatant and seemingly intentional continuity errors, I take it to be canon as "The Void" effectively retconned the story into continuity with the main future timeline.

"Earthforce" exists an alternate but closely related "pseudo-canon" continuity that contains significant contradictions to the normal continuity. Some treat it as a divergent timeline, but the exact point of divergence is still debated.

I listed the UK Annuals by their release dates as opposed to their cover dates, as from 1988 onwards they were dated to the next year (1988 as 1989, 1989 as 1990 etc.) leaving a rather confusing and unsightly gap for that year. Unless listed otherwise, the annual stories are almost entirely of dubious canonicity.

Out of Continuity

The following have proven surplus to requirements:

[1985 Annual] - "Plague of the Insecticons"

[1985 Annual] - "Missing in Action"

[1985 Annual] - "Hunted!"

[Free comic] - "The Special Teams Have Arrived" - (Advert, redraw)

[G.I. Joe and The Transformers #1-4/UK #265-281b] - (Alternate Goldbug origin)

[1986 Annual] - "To a Power Unknown!" - (Ignores Robot Master, flying Autobots)

[1986 Annual] - "The Return of the Transformers"

[1987 Annual] - "Headmaster Saga" - (Altered retelling of Headmasters #1-4)

[1988 Annual] - "Primal Bomb"

[1988 Annual] - "Peace" - ("Just a story about the stupidity of war")

[1989 Annual] - "Destiny of the Dinobots"

[1989 Annual] - "Trigger Happy!"

[1989 Annual] - "Dreadwing Down!"

[1989 Annual] - "The Chain Gang!"

[UK #255-289] - "Earthforce" - (Continuity discrepancies, maybe a new timeline? "pseudo-canon")

[1990 Annual] - "The Magnificent Six!" - (Part of Earthforce)

[1991 Annual] - "Another Time & Place" - (One of several alternate sequels)

[Transformers: Generation 2] - (Ditto, see Johnboy3434's post for reading order)

[Transformers: Generation 2 UK] - (Ditto)

[G2 1994 Annual] - (Completely Independent micro-continuity)

See respective TFWiki articles for further explanation.
