
Subject: Invitation to Support Youth Justice Action Month – Book Display, Reading List & Community Engagement

Dear Librarian,

I hope this message finds you well. I'm writing to invite you to join in recognizing Youth Justice Action Month (YJAM) this October—a national effort to raise awareness about the challenges facing youth in the justice system and to promote alternatives that uplift and empower young people.

As a cornerstone of our community's learning and dialogue, the library is uniquely positioned to engage readers around important social issues. We would be honored if you would consider supporting YJAM in the following ways:

- Host a book display highlighting titles related to youth justice, incarceration, restorative justice, and the lived experiences of young people impacted by these systems.
- Share our Youth Justice Reading List and a fact sheet about youth justice on your website or social media channels.
- Encourage library book clubs to choose a title from the list for their October reading, helping spark meaningful conversations about justice, equity, and youth resilience.

The reading list includes both fiction and nonfiction titles—some written by formerly incarcerated youth, others by experts in law, education, and child development. Many of the books are young adult literature and are ideal for intergenerational discussion. A few notable titles include The Rage of Innocence by Kristin Henning, The Hate U Give by Angie Thomas, Just Mercy by Bryan Stevenson, and Punching the Air by Ibi Zoboi & Yusef Salaam.

We believe that stories can be a powerful tool for understanding and change. By lifting up these narratives, your library can help foster a more informed, compassionate, and justice-minded community.

I've attached the full reading list and fact sheet for your reference. Please don't hesitate to reach out if you have any questions or would like support curating titles from your collection.

Thank you for all you do to nurture curiosity, learning, and civic engagement. We hope you'll join us this October in highlighting the importance of youth justice.

Warm regards,
