

Sienna's small button eyes wobbled as she made her way down the path.

She didn't have any kind of date this Valentine's - most plush dragons didn't feel comfortable being involved with someone who has a sock puppet curse. But she was doing her best not to mind - there were plenty of other great things to do on Valentine's, and she was great on her own!

In fact, she was going to treat today just like any other day, and head to the local library.

If you were looking for Sienna, the library was usually your best bet. She wasn't as interested in undoing her curse, but rather, preferred to study it. Where did it come from? Why was it affecting her in particular? Were there other plush dragons who also purposefully didn't seek out a cure? All of these questions swirled around in her mind each and every day.

She'd gotten a few answers from books, though, and she was hoping she could learn even more today! She carefully stepped up the small flight of stairs that led to the library, and did her best to heave open the doors.

If she could smell, she would take a deep breath in right now. Before her curse, she loved the scent of old books - it was the one thing she missed.

"Good morning, Sienna!" The librarian, another plush dragon, cheered. "I found a few more books you might be interested in— they're all on your regular table!"

Sienna wished she could say 'thank you.' Instead, she gave a wobbly nod, her button eyes shaking slightly as she did. She made her way to the table, considering the merits of bringing a gift next time to show her thanks... yes. That would be a good way to spend today after her reading session.