Scope & Contents:

This collection contains accession records, circulation records, financial records, correspondence and research of directors, communications created by the library, scrapbooks and photos, as well as some digital photos. This collection also contains materials from the York Mechanic's Institute and the Biddeford Public Library, precursors to McArthur Library.

Biography/History:

The Biddeford Library was chartered in 1863 as a city department. It was originally helmed by Mr. Octavius Dearing. Part of the original collection was presented by the York Mechanics' Institute, a private membership library which formed in 1840 and dissolved in 1863.

After a fire in 1894 at the City Building, the library was run out of a storefront on Main Street. After the City Building was rebuilt, the design did not leave enough space for the library to include a reading room, so the Biddeford Library and Reading Room Association was formed to find a more suitable space for the growing collection.

The Pavilion Church split from the Second Congregational Church in Biddeford in the 1857. The Pavilion Society started construction in 1863, and the finished church was dedicated on February 14th 1865. Previously the church had met in the upper floor of the Pepperell counting room. The Pavilion church eventually lost parishioners and closed in 1899. The Biddeford Library and Reading Room Association moved to secure the Pavilion Church Building as its new home. The mortgage was paid by Robert McArthur, the agent of Pepperell Mills, and donated to the Library Association. The Association in return decided to name the library after him, despite his protests.

Money was also used from the Elizabeth Stevens fund. Elizabeth Stevens was a woman who worked in the Laconia Mills who died at 41 in 1881. She left her life savings of $3,500 to the city to create a reading room for the library, which it lacked at the time. While the Pavilion church was being renovated, the Stevens Fund was used to aid the construction. With interest Stevens' contribution matched Robert McArthur's.

The McArthur Library opened in October 1902 after extensive renovations including, shortening the steeple and redesigning the interior to create a reading room in the basement and a concert hall on the first floor. Emma Hatch was the Head Librarian at the time and would go on to be the longest serving director at 42 years. In 1935 the reading room was converted to a children's room (called the Junior Department) and the auditorium into an adult reading room.

Many things have changed over the years. Dane Yorke took over as Head Librarian in 1937 and through that time expanded the library's offerings by writing "A History and Stories of Biddeford." His interest in history drove the library to collect historic archives and items that are still a part of the library's collections. Yorke also lead the first major renovations since 1935, completing a modern addition in 1963, which now houses the community room and nonfiction section.

Another addition was made in 1996, which included a new circulation desk and expanded the library's accessibility to more patrons with an elevator. That area however was not complete until 2009 when the Carroll Room was finished.
