Description:

Ntembe came to the mysteries, and people said, "A great one has come, let us go to see him."

They found him sitting on a stone and he said, "Have these people come."

They said, "Yes, we thought we should go and see the great Ntembe the owner of this land."

He said, "You are welcome, I have come myself, I have come to teach the mysteries."

Then came a serpent and he twisted it round his head, and when people passed they were bitten and died. And people complained saying, "The serpent will destroy us all."

God came saying, "You have a bad heart, you are killing my children."

He said, "Take them away and dwell with them, I Ntembe am here."

God then took the children and went on high with them, and they were happy.

Ntembe then became a mountain.
