

(In addition to printing out handouts, you probably also want to print out signs if you think there's any chance at all that students might get lost trying to find you. (Basically, we've done this for every campus except the teensy Minnesota campus where everyone knew every room on campus.) You can find templates for signs here.)

Here are the documents you'll want to print out:

- Communications handout (the activity for the Open Source communications tools lecture)
 - Click here to get pdf
 - This is a paired activity, with one handout for every two people. So if you expect, say, 50 people, you'd print out 25 (or probably 30, since we recommend to print +5 just in case).
- Practicing Git handout
 - Click here to get pdf
 - You'll want one for each person, plus one for each staffer in case they want to use it to remind themselves of the order of the activity
- Bug reports (Optional)
 - Click here to get pdf
 - We use these to help people record their progress as they go through making contributions. It helps them walk through the process, and helps us figure out where people are getting stuck. While individuals may use more than one, many people won't fill them out, so you're probably fine printing out one for each attendee +10 just in case.