TITLE:

Start the Year with Safety Resolutions (2022 Edition)

BODY:

Farewell, 2021; hello, 2022! While the challenges with COVID-19 remain as many of us have adjusted into a new normal, the start of a new year is a great time to refresh yourself and your employees on best safety practices. Resolve to keep your workers protected with these helpful tips and resources.

Implement annual safety training

Training for both new and tenured employees is a critical component of building, maintaining and improving your safety culture. Videos are a great way to reinforce expectations and safe work practices at the beginning of the year. You may also reach out to your loss prevention consultant for any training tips or resources they might have available.

Educate your employees with safety talks and webinars

Summit provides a library of safety talks that cover everything from ergonomics to safe lifting and everything in between. An abundance of programs and resources are also available for you to help create the best training for your industry, including the American Society of Safety Professionals, National Safety Council and the American Red Cross.

Refresh your safety materials to catch employees' interest

The start of a new year is a great time to post materials to serve as safety reminders. Introducing a fresh look will grab the attention of your workers. You can find safety posters and other print materials available on our website. And don't forget to check out our blog and follow our LinkedIn page for other great safety content.

We hope your new year is off to a safe and successful start. For more safety resources and information, visit the Safety Resources tab on our website.
