History: Not a lot of people knew about Richter's personal life, which suited him just fine. To his family, he was the king's brother, Cordelia's lover, and an object of hatred to the Sakamaki children. After Cordelia died, Richter was torn-up about her death, though he kept it a secret from everyone else. After all, to everybody in the castle, it seemed as though he was just using her. He still wanted an heir though, and randomly found a vampire girl and knocked her up. When it was revealed the child was to be a girl, he left the vampire to her own devices, and since she didn't really want to care for a child anyway, she sent the baby once it was born to a foreign country for adoption. Since she herself wasn't a very strong vampire, her daughter wouldn't actually be a vampire unless she reached her Awakening, though she would still exhibit vampiric speed and strength in times of distress.

New Orleans is the sort of city where if one is told vampires exist, you would believe it almost immediately. Claire didn't experience much of the city, however, because she was adopted and shut-in at a very early age. Her parents stressed over and over again they had only adopted her, hence why she looked nothing like them, but it didn't dampen Claire's spirits. She grew up in one of the lower wards of the city, and quickly made a name for herself by making special ice pops in the summer and handing them out to kids on the street, and in the winter, doing the same with soup. She never really understood why her parents were so cautious about never letting her walk a few blocks away from their house, and she wondered if it had to do with her true parents.

She soon started school at a small elementary school in town and soon got many friends due to her nature. Really, for some people it seemed impossible to hate her, and for others, it seemed obvious why she should be hated. As she got older, she craved some sort of after-school activity and tried out many: cheerleading, jazz dance, flute playing, debate, glee club, and eventually settled on a more domestic activity: cooking. While there was no club for it, there was a small diner across the street from Claire's house that her parents frequented, and the owner was eager to take her in as an apprentice, soon upgrading her to a part-time worker once she turned fourteen. It was also this owner who taught Claire her own unique brand of snark which the girl is quite proud of, as nobody really expects it.

Aside from school and work, her parents didn't let her spend much time with her friends, so she ended up naive and slightly childish from her sheltered life. Many things, even things that are second-nature to some, end up fascinating and sometimes even confusing her. Most things she knew came from TV or the books she read a lot. Her parents were there to answer any questions she had, though the night she turned seventeen, they were unable to answer her most pressing question: the strange, wondrous, and oftentimes terrifying dreams she was having nearly every night. In the dreams, she felt like someone else, and was often being pampered and tortured simultaneously by vampire brothers. At first she tried to ignore the dreams, but after they didn't go away after a year, she finally decided to take matters into her own hands. She had enough money saved up from her job that she managed to get a plane ticket to Japan. She packed up her things and left a lengthy note to her parents, sneaking out of their house in the middle of the night. She felt extremely tranced by the dreams and felt if she could just find that mansion she keeps seeing in her dreams, then all of her questions would finally be answered.

Personality: Claire is kind and friendly to almost everyone, even if they treat her rudely. She feels like everyone is deserving of kindness no matter who they are, and does her best to put this method into practice. She is often happiest when she's in the kitchen cooking her friends' favorite meals, or in her room quietly reading a book. While not really immature, she does have a childish way of speaking, walking, and going about her day that make some people pause. But her smile is often filled with joy and is enough to charm people.

Due to her sheltered life, she remains naive about many things, and gets confused or dazed easily when complex things are explained to her. This is the part of her personality most people are annoyed with. She also has an inner snark that can't be tamed, nor will she attempt to take it. This part doesn't come out a lot, but catch her in the right, or perhaps wrong mood, and she will unleash it quite proudly.

Despite her nice exterior, however, she does have her limits and can be pushed to those limits if one goes too far. She dislikes it when nobody appreciates the hard work she puts into something, or deliberately makes a mockery of something she put her heart into. She won't hit or lash out, but expect a lot of tears. And probably a small tantrum too.

When she really loves someone, she spends all of her time making that person feel special and happy. She learns about their interests and tries her hardest to get interested in them too, and is always cooking their favorite meals. Most people would call her a masochist, but for the right person, she's displayed an inner, more sadistic side.

Relationships:

Kanato Sakamaki

He's just like a little brother to Claire and she likes to spend a lot of her freetime with him. Nobody really knows why she's so attracted to him, and not even she knows why, she just...is. Even if his tantrums scare her sometimes, she always puts on a polite face and is ready to cook desserts for him. Luckily, she really loves sweets too! And playing dress-up! She loves to see what kind of outfit Kanato will sew for her next, but due to her nativity she usually has no idea they tend to be fetish clothes, like school uniforms, bunny outfits, and maid dresses. When she's sick, she crawls into his bed and listens to his singing voice.

Ayato Sakamaki

Claire sometimes feels like these two fight with each other for her affections....which she thinks is just silly, because there's plenty of her love to go around! Takoyaki was one of the first things she learned to cook while staying with them because Ayato entranced her so much. She's not a fan of the food herself, but she likes how despite his rough exterior, Ayato likes having his quiet moments too, like cuddling in the middle of a thunderstorm or drinking hot chocolate on the balcony, and it's these moments Claire loves the most in their time together. Though she really wishes he would stop telling her to strip whenever her clothes get dirty.

Kou Mukami

Claire isn't really too sure how they event met, as the Sakamakis tend to keep a good grip on her and shelter her. Perhaps it was during one of her daytime escapades when she had to go shopping for supplies while the brothers slept. Nonetheless, the two seemed to have similar personalities and the two clicked nearly instantly. She doesn't see him as often, but the few times she can sneak around, the two go shopping, eat ice cream, and sing at the karaoke bar together, just simple best-friend things that Claire thoroughly enjoys.
