

BREXIT ANARCHY: KEEGAN RISES ABOVE THE VASSAGO STRUGGLES; PALLETT GETS ELBOWED INTO A BLOODY MESS!

For the second UCC event running Team Vassago only scored victories via in-house match-making. Stockport's Michelle Keegan managed to destroy Laura Vandervoort's wardrobe in a competitive lightweight contest that was decided in the dying seconds of the fourth round when Michelle delivered a knee to Laura's chest and the blonde's tank top couldn't withstand the hit!

Here's what Michelle had to say following this unusual victory:

"Look, I know there's a lot of pressure to perform for us, Brits and I know Laura's supposed to be the best lightweight in the Vassago stable BUT the United Kingdom needed this victory just days ahead of the Brexit mess! We're leaving the EU but I'm not leaving my championship dream! Laura is such a nice girl but I needed this victory more than she does! I'd love to smother her out instead but a knee in the boobs that renders her topless is equally as impressive!" (giggles).

Meanwhile up at welterweight Paula Patton broke Nadine Coyle's orbital bone half-way through the third round after both women engaged in a spirited battle for stable supremacy in the division. Nadine's previous UMMA success counted for little when she run into Patton's brutal punches which rearranged her face and eventually forced the injury. Coyle's glory days appear to be numbered at this stage.

Elsewhere it was a Walk of Shame for every other Vassago member with Jessica Lowndes probably hitting rock bottom in her lightweight clash with old-as-the-woods Courteney Cox. The American - 24 years Jessica's senior - knocked her lights out with a single punche 23 seconds into the fight! If only Cox lost in such a fashion then the age difference could have been justified but Lowndes getting blasted like that is simply inexcusable and seriously hampers her star quality!

Hot on Lowndes' tail for the most humiliating performance of the Vassago night was Jennifer Love Hewitt who lasted 35 seconds before Leighton Meester knocked her out with a monster high kick! Jennifer went down like a sack of potatoes to rise no more...

Middleweight Odette Yustman also succumbed inside the opening 60 seconds to Jessica Simpson's chaotic boxing style while Minka Kelly couldn't escape Carrie Keagan's armbar to pile more misery on the Vassago roster. Who the hell is Carrie Keagan anyway?

Equally painful was the defeat for another local favorite - albeit self-labelled as the most hated woman in Britain - Roxanne Pallett who got trapped in Beth Lily's side guard and promptly smashed into a bloody mess with some vicious elbows. One could say the London audience actually enjoyed that finish but the pundits were slightly caught off guard as they predicted Beth would attack Roxanne's ribs to follow suit on the controversial Celebrity Big Brother storyline. She didn't but still beat the living daylights out of the hapless Pallett who didn't land a clean punch in three minutes of action. In fact the petite Cumbrian brunette was lucky she didn't exit the arena with a broken nose! Still better than false reports about broken ribs!

More damage control among the Vassago backbenchers as well...

Heavyweight Lindsey Vonn cited a wrist injury that derailed her boxing slugfest against unheralded September Carillo but that sounds like a weak excuse from the alpine skiing champion who apparently has taken too many tumbles on the slopes to sustain a vicious MMA test in the cage anymore.

Last but not least the most encouraging performance in defeat happened down at featherweight where Dutch stunner Sylvie van der Vaart slugged it out for almost 15 full minutes with Chrissie Chau before she simply couldn't take it anymore and got pounded into a bitter stoppage inside the final thirty seconds of the scheduled distance. Sylvie believed she could have won the grudge battle on the scorecards but was trapped in a jabbing hailstorm come the third round and run out of steam against a younger opponent. This being said, Chau is very much within the blonde's range so watch out for a rematch between these two babes going forward!
