The small room was something that Emilio was growing all too familiar with now. He'd been down here repeatedly but the tests weren't quite done. With a fairy and psychic Nera there were a number of different possibilities for what kind of abilities he might possess, ranging from luck to telepathy- most people usually had an inkling of something different but Emilio was never fully aware of what abilities he himself manifested. As such, they were conducting a number of tests to determine exactly what he might be capable of.

He was seated on a small chair at a table where a young lady in a lab coat sat across from him. It wasn't Blackthorn this time which was a bit disappointing but Emilio was still interested to see what was going to happen. Lilypad was sitting on the table as well, the little goomy happily swaying in his spot while Woolie sat at his feet. The bug-type Wooloo wasn't usually one he brought on outings like this as she wasn't the smallest pokemon in the world, but she'd practically begged Emilio to come so he had brought her along. Then lastly there was Alias who was sitting on the table beside Lilypad. The Larvesta was staring at three buttons that were laid out in front of them and nervously Emilio reached to pick them up. They had that look in their eyes that suggested they were about to attack the buttons and while he didn't know exactly what they did yet, he knew that it was probably something Alias should not throw around carelessly.

"In this appointment we are just going to play a couple of games." The lab assistant said and Emilio raised an eyebrow.

"Some games?"

"That's right. You'll see there are three buttons in front of you." Emilio looked at the buttons again. "For every round one of these buttons will give you 5 points, one of the buttons will give you 0 points, and one button will take away 5 points. They are randomised each and every round so we never know which button will do what. The goal of the game is to get as many points as possible, and if you go into the negative's you lose."

A simple enough game really. Emilio gave a quick nod of understanding and looked between his three pokemon. "Do... I win anything if I win?" He asked hopefully and the lady shot him a somewhat tired look.

"You win my appreciation."

"Ah..."

That wasn't a lot of motivation to try and play the game and win, but as it stood Emilio was rather competitive so even if there was no prize he still wanted to win. Looking down at Woolie he gently pet their head, doing so to Lilypad and Alias. He hoped that one of them would give him their luck and as the game began he looked down to Woolie. "Which one Woolie" He asked softly. "Left, middle or right-" She baa'd at the middle one and so he gave a small nod. If that is the one she wanted, then that is the one he would pick and he pressed down the middle button to watch as it turned green.

"Five points, a good start."

That was a good start! He felt some degree of excitement suddenly at this, wondering just how high he might be able to go and looked at Lilypad. "Which one Lily?" He asked to the water pokemon and the Goomy looked towards him briefly before looking to the buttons. Their form slid across the table and rested on the first button, that being the one they chose and as they went on top it turned green.

"Another Five points, not bad. New total is ten."

After Lily Emilio looked down at Alias. He wanted to ask them for another one but honestly, he doubted that Alias would listen well enough to give him what he was after so instead of was Emilio's choice and he gave a low hum. After a moment he pressed the middle one again, hoping for green but instead it turned red.

"Negative five. Five points left."

Emilio frowned at that. That was... disappointing. The lady too seemed disappointed but the game continued for hours. Everytime that one of his pokemon picked a button, wether it was Woolie, Lily, or even Alias they would win five points. If the lab assistant chose a button then they also consistently won five points- it was only when Emilio himself picked which one to press that things seemed to be more random. From it the lady had a hypothesis, and Emilio felt quite wronged about it.

"...So you think that I bring luck to the people around me."

"That's what it's looking like."

"But I myself, am in fact not that lucky at all."

"Yes. But I'd like to run a few more tests to see."

"That just doesn't seem fair.."
