

Now visit the new website: <https://sites.google.com/site/shareyouredustory/>

“Life can only be understood backwards; but it must be lived forwards.”

– Søren Kierkegaard

Reflection makes us stronger, wiser, and more precise. In our journey to understand ourselves as educators, we should continually reflect about what we believe in, what has worked well, and also what has failed miserably in our classrooms. Blogging is a great platform for reflection. The process of writing and sharing your work with others can guide you as you move forward in your journey as an educator. What a better time to do it than now... as 2015 begins.

“Become a documentarian of what you do.”

– Austin Kleon, Show Your Work!

Show your work. Share #YOUREduStory. We need to not only reflect for ourselves, but also to show the community what teaching and learning is all about. After all, if we don't tell our stories, somebody else will.

I have been blogging for the past two years and I struggle with feeling like I need to blog more, share more, and show more of my struggle. This year in 2015, I'd like to do just that. This idea was actually born in a Voxer group of Edcamp organizers from around the United States.

So here is the SHARE #YOUREduStory BLOGGING CHALLENGE 2015:

- One blog post a week
- Connect and comment on others' blog posts
- Be given a topic to think about for the week (if you need it)
- Be able to add topic ideas in honor of Edcamp style
- Join a calendar that will send you blogging reminders

To join SHARE #YOUREduStory 2015 Challenge fill out this form.

To join SHARE #YOUREduStory 2015 Challenge calendar.

SHARE #YOUREduStory participant list. Short link: goo.gl/DTWsGJ

SHARE #YOUREDESTORY 2015 Challenge Google spreadsheet of topics.