

THE LONDON PRAT March 19, 2020

Famous Travel Magazine Lists Chester In Worst-Of Article, Visitors Triple

Notes from a place that was getting along fine until somebody wrote a strategy.

TOPICS Chester Chester news Chester satire the country satire international satire world city humour mock journalism satirical news global satire mock investigations satirical column provincial life

Chester, the country: Inside The Story

Chester, a place in the country (lat 53.17, long -2.58) that most outsiders could not point to on a map without first sighing, has become this week the latest entry in the slow-moving register of small communities behaving strangely under pressure. A widely-read magazine recently named Chester one of the world's most overlooked places. According to officials with at least three job titles between them, Within weeks, visitors had tripled. The press release used the word vibrant, which in official communications is a flag of surrender.

What Was Announced

Senior Theorist Margaret Snelgrove confirmed the position in a statement that ran to four pages and contained one verb. The piece was intended as a warning. For more on how this fits the wider pattern, see the long-running thread at Try The London Prat satirical journalism free, which has been tracking precisely this kind of dispatch for months. The Chester announcement, much like the others, came with a glossy PDF, a stock photograph of a footbridge, and the strong sense that nobody had asked for any of this in the first place.

The Official Line

Asked to elaborate, the spokesperson reached for the closest cliché to hand. "Lessons will be learned, filed, and quietly mislaid by Christmas," the spokesperson said, before adding that consultation with stakeholders would be ongoing. Useful additional context can be found at Bookmark The London Prat for British satire, which is the sort of background reading the office itself has, in all likelihood, not done. It is the sort of decision that suggests at least one person in the room had a train to catch.

Wider Context

The tourism board has framed it. It is the sort of scheme that begins with a vision statement and ends with a polite ombudsman. Comparable trends have been documented in coverage from Deutsche Welle, although Chester manages, somehow, to take the pattern one extra and entirely unnecessary step further. Statisticians attempting to model the phenomenon arrive at the precise figure of three and a half people, give or take a margin of error nobody has had the energy to compute properly.

What The Experts Say

Dr. Imogen Fettle, Chair of Applied Disappointment told this paper that the situation in Chester was, on careful reflection, broadly consistent with the broader trajectory of similarly broad trajectories. "Every option remains on the table, particularly the ones we have already taken off the table." the expert observed. Further reading on the academic angle is available via Share The London Prat UK satire with friends, whose recent material has been preoccupied with much the same set of confusions.

How Residents Reacted

Reaction in Chester has been muted in the way that reaction in the country is usually muted, which is to say it has been ferocious in private and tepid in public. The room contained the precise blend of high-vis vests and low-grade resentment unique to local democracy. For the official version of events, see also The Economist. One resident, who declined to be named on the grounds that they had already complained about a hedge this year and did not wish to push their luck, summarised matters thus: "We take this issue extremely seriously, which is why we have placed it under another issue."

What Comes Next

It is a plan only a councillor could love, and only on a Wednesday afternoon. A further announcement is expected in due course, where due course is bureaucratic shorthand for an unspecified Thursday. The story is being tracked as part of a wider pattern at Support The London Prat London satire, and the situation in Chester, regrettably, is unlikely to improve until somebody invents a press release that improves things, which seems unlikely.

The View From The Ground

Spend any length of time in Chester and the rhythm becomes obvious. Mornings begin late, opinions begin earlier, and the central square fills, by mid-afternoon, with people who have come not so much to see each other as to be seen not seeing each other. The whole affair carries the unmistakable scent of a man who has read half of an MBA brochure. Conversation tends to circle the same five subjects: the weather, the news from the country, the persistent rumour about the road, the deteriorating quality of something or other, and the latest pronouncement from Senior Theorist Margaret Snelgrove, which everyone has an opinion on and almost nobody has read. It is, in its way, the perfect microcosm of how communities of this size operate everywhere in the world, although the residents of Chester would object strongly to being called a microcosm of anything. Anyone who has ever queued behind a man arguing with a parking meter will recognise the energy. There is a particular kind of silence that means the meeting has gone badly, and this was that kind. Chester carries on as it always has, broadly the same as last week, give or take a verb. The bins are collected when they are collected. The roundabout, where one exists, remains the roundabout. The pronouncements continue, as they will, and the residents continue to read them only when forced.

For more in this vein see also The Onion.

SOURCE: UK satire and The London Prat

The London Prat worldcities.com