RATINGS

Caçador has a population next to 80 thousand inhabitants and is the most populous city in the region. The city of Caçador extends itself over a 380,034 sq mi area. The predominant climate in the city of Caçador is the subtropical humid temperate and registers average temperatures of 61,88 °F. The town neighbors the cities of Calmon, Videira and Faiburgo. Caçador is 88 years old, and its anniversary is on the 25th of March.

The first inhabitants arrived at the beginning of the XIX century. We can say that this city has as its main raw material the timber. It has over 230 industrial establishments and in the past years, the investments in the quality of people's lives, made this place a great spot to live.

It has the name "Caçador" in reference to the abundance of hunting species in the region when it was founded. It has many green areas, a beautiful central park, a street market with local products, besides a traditional local trade from countryside villages.

From indigenous influence, the corn, the manioc and the "pinhão" are very present. The barbecue can't lack either and has its special place in families Sundays in the west because of the influence from "gaúchos" and Argentinian. The "quirera" is a very tasty dish done with trituated corn, shaping small flakes. This dish is generally prepared with pork and sausage and is a huge success, especially if prepared in an iron pan on a wood burner which is a local tradition.
