Letter of Support for the Preservation of Poljud Stadium, Split

To whom it may concern,

We, the undersigned architects / urbanists / professionals in the field of the built environment, express our strong support for the preservation of Poljud Stadium in Split, Croatia.

Designed by architect Boris Magaš and completed in 1979, Poljud Stadium represents an exceptional achievement of late modernist architecture and structural engineering. Its iconic shell structure has become a defining symbol of the city of Split and an important part of the collective memory and identity of its citizens, as well as the broader architectural community.

As professionals committed to the quality, continuity, and responsibility of the built environment, we are deeply concerned by proposals that envision the demolition of this landmark in favour of commercial development. Such an approach disregards not only the architectural value of the structure but also its broader cultural, social, and historical relevance.

We emphasize that contemporary architectural practice must prioritize sustainability, resource consciousness, and the responsible transformation of existing structures. In this context, the preservation and adaptive reuse of Poljud Stadium represent a far more meaningful and forward-looking strategy than demolition.

We therefore call upon the responsible authorities, institutions, and stakeholders to:

- Uphold the protected cultural heritage status of Poljud Stadium,
- Reject any proposals for its demolition,
- Support its careful restoration and long-term integration into the urban and social fabric of Split.

As members of the international architectural community, we stand in solidarity with ongoing efforts to protect this significant work and advocate for its recognition as an irreplaceable part of European architectural heritage.

Sincerely,
