

Tucklet arrives at a convention center in Indianapolis, IN for his final rally until election night, he steps out in his casual khakis and a button up shirt. He shakes hands with factory workers and teacher standing outside. As he walks in the crowd erupts into cheers as they stand and clap. He waves as he approaches the podium. Before speaker he shakes hands with his Campaign Manager.

“Hello Indianapolis! It’s an honor to be here today at the final speech of my campaign. This has been a rough one, but we are going to pull through and win this election. It is imperative that we all work hard, we all work together to defeat Kingmaker502 this election. My campaign has put out various policies about my plan to make Lincoln 1 better than ever before. Last campaign we came so close to flipping this district, only a 1% margin. This campaign I am more confident than ever in our ability to flip this district red. Now, before we end this campaign let’s end it with a bang. Tonight, I am proud to announce that if elected I will work on legislation to ensure that jobs will come back to Lincoln and our factories will be up and running again. It is imperative that we do this. C’mon folks, are we gonna let the far left consume Lincoln with their policies?”

The crowd shouts loudly “NO!”

“I am going to fight for our educators and the unborn, we need to do that. I will work to bring a brighter future for this state’s children. I want to do one simple thing: Return power to the state’s. It is imperative we do this, states deserve the right to determine their own curriculum and I will fight for that if elected. I will meet with teachers if elected and discuss the best course of action to take when proposing a bill to better our education system. It’s time our teachers got a say in things too!”

“Settle down, settle down. We all know that some are attacking me, saying I voted against a gay rights resolution. I didn’t. I abstained on the resolution because I personally felt that if we are going to pass a resolution why couldn’t we pass a bill about LGBT rights? I’m not opposed to gay rights, I never have been. My only problem with the resolution was that it did nothing but try and score political points, which I’m never okay with. As your Congressman I will try and write a bill that will recognize gay rights and work to ensure them. It’s high time people take actual action against these things instead of just incessant shouting about how they’ll support them. I am going to make sure I advocate for the LGBT community if elected to Congress. It’s time we did something!”

The crowd erupts into more cheering, shouting and chanting “DO SOMETHING!”

“I will work for our factory workers and immediately prepare to propose legislation that will bring back jobs. For far too long some have ignored the backbone of this district and allowed that loud sucking sound to continue sucking our jobs away. We need to lower taxes across the board for everyone in this state, I personally feel that the government has no right to just tax our state’s working families so much money. As your Congressman I will work hard to keep the government from stealing so much of your money and I will try to put more money back in your pockets. Another thing I will work to do is gun reform. While I have a completely different idea of what that means than my opponent does, I still think it needs to happen. I want to work on bipartisan gun reform that will establish universal background checks and end things like the gun show loophole. While I am heavily pro 2nd amendment, one thing I am not is pro-taking guns away. We need to all come together and work on gun reform, but gun reform that doesn't infringe on the second amendment!"

"My friends, this is a time for change and just over the horizon the red wave is arriving. It is going to fix the problems that for too long the people of Lincoln have been stuck with. These problems will be fixed by common sense candidates with common sense solutions. My campaign has already released our platform and our foreign policy goals, however we haven't seen the same. I wonder where a concrete platform from Mr Kingmaker is, if one exists. This election day I don't think the choice could be more clearer, I implore you to cast your ballot for me on election day and make the right choice for this district. Thank you Indianapolis and God bless the United States of America!"

He walks out of the convention hall smiling brightly as the crowd erupts into cheers, chanting "Tucklet!" He shakes hands with people waiting outside and gets into his pickup truck and drives off.
