Public schools do the public good

In a state where we value a strong workforce and a thriving economy, we should also value our public schools. More than 1.4 million students attend public schools in North Carolina, and they graduate more than 120,000 students annually. They provide skills learners need to be prepared for college, careers, and lifelong learning. When students are educated, they have a better chance of earning higher wages. That benefits the individual and the economy.

In a state where we value a strong sense of community, we should also value our public schools. They encourage our future leaders to think critically, problem solve and communicate. They promote understanding, tolerance, and a strong sense of community. The public schools are the community! They are one of the top three employers in 91 of our 100 counties.

I am asking our legislators to UPHOLD Governor Cooper's Veto And STOP Wasting Tax Dollars on School Vouchers!
