Product: focus pill.

Subject Line: Creativity in a Bottle.

Three weeks ago, Daniel went to his lectures.

He sat for hours, taking note after note, banging his head against the table.

Cramming as much information down on paper as he could.

Ready for his big essay.

He returns home later that day, sits down, takes out his notes, and turns on his laptop.

With Pen and paper in hand,

Ready to start his work.

He gets ready to brainstorm his first masterpiece. And....

NOTHING!

His mind is blank.

He scrambles through his note pad trying to find inspiration.

But still nothing.

Doubt sets in, he tells himself "I can't do this, I just cannot focus." He feels his mind is trapped, stuck in a dark abyss of nothingness.

He gets angry, he can feel his blood starting to boil.

He feels deflated, like someone has sucker punched him in the gut.

He feels like he's going to fail.

3 weeks go by and Daniel has completed THREE essays.

Word after word flowing like a river, from mind to paper.

He's unstoppable. He can work longer and harder without the need for rest.

How did Daniel accomplish this?

Well, it wasn't drugs, coffee or energy drinks.

Nor did he unlock some magical key to the universe that gave him all the answers..

Daniel had discovered something.

In just 10 days and three simple study changes,

Daniel had become as sharp as a sword, slashing through as if it was cotton thread.

He had become a kid that could get things done, no matter the task or the obstacles in his path.

He had become a top-of-the class student.
