

Patricia Villone has more than three decades of experience at CTV News, a local cable

TV station that also airs online, as the Senior Reporter and News Anchor. While she covers many issues, her specialty is environmental, cross-cultural and legislative issues. In addition, she used to produce a Spanish-language TV program about Latino issues.

Patti's awards include 4 National Tellys and several SPJ (Society of Professional Journalists) awards. Most recently she won a Telly for a series on the "Lakeland" community and was a SPJ Dateline Awards finalist for the same series. She has also won several fellowships; including one on "fracking" from IJNR (Institute for Journalism & Natural Resources), and others from the Knight Center for Specialized Journalism and the Scripps Howard Foundation.

Patti has a bachelor's degree in Broadcast News from Virginia Commonwealth University and a Master's in International Communication from The American University. She has also studied abroad at Intercultura in Heredia, Costa Rica and at L'Università di Perugia in Italy, and used to teach English at the British School of Turin in Torino, Italy.

###