Quotes from the characters

- Quotes from source material for me to reference. This helps me keep characters in character.

Notes to keep in mind

- I use this to write things from canon that I need to remember. For example, making sure where I put stairs in a house so I know where my character in a wheelchair would need assistance.
- Or maybe this is notes about what an antagonist is doing that I need to remember.
- Or maybe this is a reminder about something I need to remember to include.

Scene Ideas

- Character A and character B go to the store together and see character A's estranged parents. Character B spends the entire shopping trip scouting the aisles to make sure character A doesn't run into their parents, even going so far as to pretend to be taking a poll to stall them so character A can check out in peace. When they finally get back to the car, and character B tells character A everything they did, that's when character A realizes they are head over heels totally in love with character B.
- Character A is on a date that is going horribly wrong, but meets the waiter, Character B, and they really hit it off. They talk about x, y, z, and eventually Character B helps Character A get out of the date by "accidentally" spilling water on the date's shirt.

- Character B is bipolar. He goes through a depressive state and avoids Character A. He hasn't told them he is bipolar, and can't bring himself to tell or to ask for help. Character A goes to the house, learns about the situation, does a ton of research on how to be supportive but not overbearing or controlling and stays there and supports him day by day. This is when Character B realizes he is head over heels in love with Character A.
- Write a scene that shows x aspect of Character A personality.
- Foreshadow this and that.
