Gender Issues In Psychology

Why Women Live Longer

There are various explanations for why women are responsible for their longer life expectancy.

Genetic Protection

Females are genetically protected by the X-chromosome and the effects of estrogen till menopause. This factor is also considered to be a protective factor.

Behavioral Factors

There is a lot of research showing that women are less likely to engage in risky behaviors, such as drinking and driving, which compromises and risks their lives. These behaviors are linked to liver cirrhosis, heart problems, and liver cancer. The rate of deaths by liver cancer is a significant factor in this regard. Many of these behaviors are not common among men, which is why men are more likely to die from pedestrian accidents or pedestrian accidents.

Marriage and Loneliness

Usually more women than men experience loneliness in longevity i.e., men die earlier. Also in societies like ours, where men live for many years. Fewer men than women experience loneliness.

Marriage

Being married and the presence of children are important factors in people's lives. People who have had a successful marriage and have children are less likely to experience loneliness. In case of females the effects of loneliness are more serious effects on their health.

Empty Nest Syndrome

Men and women may experience loneliness. However a number of studies have shown that if all the children leave home, parents adjust better. Also, if they leave at the same time, they are happier. A number of studies have shown that parents are happier and happier than the children. In fact they may get even happier.
