

Mysterious thief covets The Stone of Tecuhtli.

Sheriff Caitlyn and Enforcer Vi are on the case.

Giacomo Consenza. reporting from Piltover's Museum of Ancient History.

Good morning dear readers, Giacomo Conzenza here representing The City of Progress for this new version of The Journal of Justice. I'm quite excited to say the least about taking part on this on behalf of Piltover, let's hope things don't go awry with it like last time.

The Stone of Tecuhtli, for you who might not know, was discovered by Ezreal in the boundaries between the Kumungu and Plague Jungles. The rarity of archeological evidence from the "Plague Cultures" as defined by experts on the field plus the extraordinary state of conservation of the artifact, makes The Stone of Tecuhtli one of the most prized artifacts of the museum's collection. That's why the curators of the museum were severely alarmed when a small card marked with an ornate "C" was found this morning pinned on the gates of the museum bearing the following message on its flipside:

-Hello Piltover. Tomorrow night The Stone of Tecuhtli will be mine. Expect some company.

Regards: "C" –

Upon hearing the news, Sheriff Caitlyn rushed to investigate the case along with her partner Vi. Upon arriving to the museum, Caitlin inspected the mysterious card left behind at the door and confirmed it was in fact "C", a mysterious cat burglar who she had been attempting to catch for quite a long time already. Upon being asked on whether this would finally be her chance to capture him, Caitlin stated sternly: "I cannot guarantee anything yet, but we need to proceed with extreme caution and precision if we are to catch him. "C" isn't just your everyday burglar, his heists have been big and he is confident enough to let you know he's coming. That's should tell you something" The duo was taken inside and into The Hall of The Plague Cultures to inspect the item they were to protect in greater detail, the curators were visibly nervous around Vi, fearing she would break something.

After surveying the room, Caitlin set up a plan to keep watch and defend the museum during the night. I'm not allowed to report the plan in detail for obvious reasons, but I've been let known that other Champions from Piltover have volunteered to protect the museum; Ziggs, Jayce, Ezreal, Corki and Heimerdinger offered up to show up. All of them were allowed to intervene with the exception of Ziggs, who wasn't allowed to come near the museum due to the obvious property damage that would accidentally happen. The security systems inside and around the museum have been tightened up and because of these preparations against the heist, Piltover's Museum of Ancient History will be closed until further notice.

Vi showed to be rather nonchalant on the whole issue. -Before I got hired into the police force by Cupcake here, me and the gang never tried to steal anything from museums- Vi said" Too much of a hassle for some useless old junk covered in dust. And, tell me, who would warn you in advance on what they're going to steal anyways?. This "C" guy is either really good or really stupid. I wouldn't care either way as long as I get to give him a bit of the good old fashioned punch in the face greeting"

And after telling me that, Vi gave me noogie for no apparent reason...I'd really would like somebody else to approach her for the questions next time.