APRIL 26, 2023

UTR crept its way into my world at a very strange, stressful, and intensely lonely point in my life. Things were so chaotic for most of 2022, I'm not even sure when I ordered Adeline or how long its pieces sat in a cardboard box after my dog Murphy tried to make a snack out of the album.

All I know for sure is that I find myself on a discord server in late 2022, something I had vowed to never use again after getting overwhelmed by a different band's discord server, ha.

I remember noticing immediately that the people in this new server, were "my type of weird". And when my disorganized self finally got around to checking out this band of weirdos' music, I was just floored.

Cut to a few months ago... I was either ILL, or I was having withdrawals from my anti-anxiety meds, or having a panic attack from the trauma of experiencing withdrawals several months earlier (one of the chaotic things of 2022). I was bracing myself to hit another emotionally low point, when the chorus of "Go to sleep" spontaneously starts playing in my head... and then I was miraculously able to go to sleep despite feeling like my body was about to combust!

Being able to meet and hug the people that provided the music that brought me so much relief while I was hurting on so many levels... I'm so, so grateful for it. TWFD <3
