“The Director of Research hasn’t been seen on site for two months now. I need an investigation on his disappearance conducted immediately.” The Ethics Committee Member turns towards a nearby ISD Inspector, prompting him to act. “I expect an update on the investigation by the end of the day. Failure will not be tolerated.”

“Understood. I will gather a team of investigation agents and start looking into this matter.” The Inspector pulls up his radio and starts organizing a search team. “I want multiple agents to meet me at the Research Wing. We’re launching an investigation on the missing Director of Research Kiryu.”

A team of three ISD Agents group up with the ISD Inspector outside of the Director of Research’s office. The window to the door is heavily tinted or blocked, making visibility into the office null.

“Proceed with caution gentlemen, it is unknown what the Director could have been conducting within his office.” The ISD Inspector opens the door to the Director’s office and enters alongside his agents. “What is all of this?” Within the office, there was mysterious machinery lined throughout the room that took up almost the entirety of the office. Papers had been scattered and littered throughout the floor. Filing cabinets had been seemingly rummaged through, left open and damaged. “Agents, I’m unsure what happened here, but stay on standby outside the door and let me take over the main search for evidence.”

The Inspector starts gathering documents, taking pictures, and sketches of what he can. Among the documents he finds various details on projects the Director was working on. Various project details were found. These ranged from MK-Ultra esque experiment logs, research on several SCP's, and reports on other researchers. There was one file that stood out. It was badly damaged, marked, and censored. Despite this, it had insight on just what the machine possibly was.

Entry Log 37: Director Kiryu

Progress on the machine is nearly complete. Perhaps now I can finally gain a true understanding of this dark energy I've heard too much about. I need to ensure the photon readings are carefully analyzed while conducting this next experiment. I am confident it will yield very fruitful results.

The report the ISD Inspector read wasn't very long, or filled with extreme details. But it was some sort of lead. The Inspector started analyzing the machine for anything before concluding the search of the office. Upon opening the strange machine's door, a shadow was cast out of the machine. Almost as if darkness was leaking into the room. On a key holder on the machine's door, was the Director of Research's keycard. Whatever happened here, it would appear the Director never left this office at all. Despite this, he is missing. As the ISD inspector gets his radio ready to speak with Site Inspection, the door to the office breaks down and armed guards enter the room. "Wait, the investigation is almost conclu-". The inspector alongside his agents were killed.

“Alpha-1, report on your orders. Are the ISD agents taken care of?”

“Yes sir, all of the agents are taken care of, and his report has been collected.

What are we to do about the Director’s office?”

“I want all files retrieved for me and any machines destroyed immediately. Clear out the office and prepare it for a new Director of Research. We’ll need to find a replacement immediately. Ensure that the Committee hears nothing of this.”

“Understood sir, I’ll inform my unit.”
