OC: "things get harder"

Katrina Crider often works with horses at Guardian Oaks Therapy Farm with her mother. After a tough winter weather season, Guardian Oaks is looking for more volunteers.

"We can't do anything without the community, we cannot provide, we cannot do any of it without other people's help."

Located in Moberly, Guardian Oaks takes in stray horses and horses who were headed for slaughter, providing them a home. Details on how to volunteer can be found on the farm's Facebook page at 'Guardian Oak Growth By Giving.'

"I'm hoping we're going to have more people. I'm hoping that the horizons for Guardian Oaks will expand more before things get harder."
