James Krane is a police officer who has been serving as an officer for 15 years. James Krane always felt a need to ensure justice is served for everyone, no matter their background. However in some cases justice could not be served due to the system the government has in place. James snapped one day demanding changes that are just not possible and was dismissed from all duties as an officer. James decided that he wouldn't stop trying to serve justice to those who deserve it, setting up petitions and protests in order to make changes.

Whilst setting these events up James was being watched by men in military uniform. He was also being watched at night by 966. It seems as though 966 couldn't deprive James of sleep no matter how hard they try. One night 966 was felt by James as he got out of bed suddenly only to be knocked back into bed by 966 who was standing over him. James believed it was just a dream.

The next day James was preparing for one of the protests he had organised, everything happened as normal however the men in military uniform were not to be seen. In their replacement stood 3 men in suits, 2 with sunglasses one without. As James approached the men in suits to ask if they were taking part he blacked out and woke up in a white room covered in padding as though he was in a psychiatric ward. The three men in suits entered the room and explained who they are and what they do. Detailing how they were following James as he appears to be immune to SCP-966's insomnia effects. They also told him they were observing his actions and how he strives for justice to all and inspired them to look further into James. The 3 men presented James with a suit to wear and a name tag saying "Critical - IA Agent" and escorted him to a lecture hall to invite him into becoming an Internal Affairs Agent in the foundation ensuring justice is served to all without restrictions.

2 weeks in and James Krane had ensured justice came to all, D-Class and site staff. Helping to prevent breaches by ensuring Code of Conduct and Code of Ethics is followed by everyone during tests, and whilst guards are ensuring security is held tight in D-Block.

Whilst in the foundation.

After being given this new life to live inside the foundation James Krane had settled into the flow of the foundation. Learning about the principles of the foundation, its past and present affairs. Upon progressing through the foundation and gaining more and more knowledge James Krane still felt as though something was missing. A piece of his memory that had been trapped in a cage and kept away from him.

Small flashes of what was or what could be came into Jame's mind, questioning who he really is he went to the containment of SCP-939 with a Biohazard Researcher, GENSEC Officer and a D-Class. The Biohazard explained that 939 cannot see anyone who doesn't make a sound, echo location.

Whilst talking to the Researcher the D-Class pulled out a knife and held it to the GENSEC Officer, threatening to kill the Officer if the contents of the syringe wasn't explained to the D-Class. Calmly the Researcher stated it provides memory altercations depending on the concentration.

The D-Class took the blood out of the syringe and poured it into a small vial and said he was going to drink it to make him go insane and he would then have to be released from the "place" he was in.

Opening the vial and drinking the blood the D-Class started to stumble as though he had just downed a bottle of vodka, exclaiming his vision was blurry before passing out. The Researcher quickly started whispering in the D-Class's ear and the D-Class awoke, questioning where he was and why he was holding a knife which he quickly threw away.

Curious, James asked what just happened, to which the Researcher explained 939 blood causes people to forget the last three days of their life. He also explained there are 6 classes of amnestics. These being A, B, C, D, E and F with Class A being 1 week, B being 3 weeks, C being 2 months, D being 6 months, E being a memory specific wipe, F being redacted to Senior CI4.

James had another memory come into his mind, his 14th birthday. But this wasn't the same memory that James had. The memory James had before he was with his family, this new memory shows a ghost like human, older than James.

He was woken out of this memory by the Snr. Researcher who said 939 was becoming extremely aggressive and that E-11 were on their way.

James Krane decided to start looking up ghost like SCPs and found a match. SCP-8000. The SCP takes the form of a loved one during times of extreme stress or dangerous situations. There have only been two instances found and they can only "bind" to one person.

Instance one was bound to ### and another was bound to [classified]. Curious to know more James requested a meeting with the Dpt. Director to find out more, to see if there is a third instance or if he is one of the members who have been bound to 8000. Instead of meeting the Dpt. Director a member of the mysterious council for SCP foundation, was sitting in the chair with the written version of the file James just read on the site computers.

The council member explained that he was the second person to have been bound to 8000 and that James was the first. He also explained that James was taken to site 46 and was tested on with multiple safe and extremely dangerous SCPs. Due to the nature of the foundation they couldn't take him onboard at his age however couldn't let him go so they wiped his mind of anything to do with 8000.

The council member seemed to have some ropes tethered to an invisible object. The mysterious council member injected the air with a chemical that is not documented anywhere. This slowly started to form a tall skinny pale skinned figure which the council member explained was SCP-966. The SCP which couldn't affect James. The council were interested in why this was and later found out it was due to 8000 protecting him. SCP-966 had in fact killed James Krane in his sleep instead of depriving his sleep, however SCP-8000 went into James's heart and gave him one last life saving beat.

Due to this new knowledge James had he was eager to learn more about new anomalies and to learn more about 8000 just as much as the council were. James was handed a new suit made out of 966 skin allowing him to stay hidden during dangerous situations. He was also handed a red card marked CL4 alongside this a chip was injected into James Krane which when scanned read "Archon-Class SCP | CL4 Ambassador".

A tranquilliser pistol was provided to James as a "safety weapon".
Finally, a new name badge was given reading:

“Ambassador - James ‘Critical’ Krane”.
