Netflix On 'Squid Game Season 2': Nothing Has Been Confirmed Yet

There's no denying that "Squid Game" has become the highlight of 2021. The impact that the Netflix series on pop culture is immeasurable.

According to reports, over 111 million Netflix subscribers globally watched "Squid Game" in the first 28 days. That's far more than the previous record of 82 million by "Bridgerton."

Reports have also noted that the series has recorded around 3 billion minutes of watch time. If the figures are accurate, we can assume that “Squid Game” made almost $900 million for Netflix.

“Squid Game” continues to trend around the world and maintains the top spot in Netflix viewer ratings for 46 days.

Fans have been begging for the second season of “Squid Game” and to their delight, director Hwang Dong Hyuk’s recent statement shed some glimmer of hope.

READ: Are You Ready For Another Run? ‘Squid Game’ Director Confirms Second Season!

In an interview with the Associated Press, director Hwang Dong Hyuk spilled that there will be “Squid Game Season 2.”

"Squid Game has received so much love that there is no choice to make a season 2" and "there will be a second season," director Hwang Dong Hyuk shared.

The “Squid Game” director also shared some details about the highly anticipated project saying, “It's still in the planning stage, so I can't say the exact release date or start time of filming, but it's true that season 2 is being prepared." He also pointed out that the main character Kihoon who is played by Lee Jung Jae will come back in the second season to do something for the world.

In contrary to director Hwang Dong Hyuk’s statement, however, a Netflix spokesperson clarified the reports.

“We are reviewing season 2, but nothing has been confirmed yet,” the Netflix spokesperson said. Such a statement from the Netflix representative implies that the streaming service giant is taking a more conservative approach in the discussion of the “Squid Game Season 2.”

Uaenas Relieved As IU Tests Negative For COVID-19

On November 8, IU attended the wedding of singer Lee Ji Hoon and his wife Ayane. During the event, IU sang the congratulatory song for the newlywed.

However, fans were worried after reports confirmed that there was a confirmed case of COVID-19 among the guests who attended the wedding.

IU's agency, EDAM Entertainment, released a statement explaining the series of events concerning the singer.

"We were informed that there is a confirmed case of COVID-19 in the wedding that IU attended. During the event, IU was wearing a mask and sang the congratulatory song while wearing it. IU immediately left the scene after the congratulatory song, so there was no contact between her and the confirmed case," EDAM Entertainment explained.

EDAM Entertainment then announced that as a preemptive response, IU and her staff underwent PCR testing for COVID-19. Fortunately, IU and her staff tested negative of the virus.

"As a preemptive response, we conducted PCR (gene amplification) tests with IU and all of the staff at the site, and as a result of the tests, all of the staff including IU were negative," EDAM Entertainment shared.

EDAM Entertainment also assures fans that they will continue to work on ensuring the health and safety of their artists.

"We will continue to do our best for the health and safety of the artist by complying with the quarantine guidelines of the health authorities," EDAM Entertainment stated.

Meanwhile, Singer Lim Chang Jung who also sang a congratulatory song in the wedding tested positive on November 9 after undergoing a PCR test for a broadcast recording. Musical actor Son Jun Ho who also staged a performance in the celebration tested negative of the virus.

IU recently made a successful comeback with "Strawberry Moon." The song achieved a perfect all-kill on the charts and became her third song to achieve such status this year.
